Mr. BAYARD. I would say that I really believe the joint resolution which the Senator from New Jersey proposes to take up will not occupy fifteen minutes of the time of the Senate. It simply provides for a board of survey to ascertain whether certain iron-clad vessels should be completed or not. It is not a question of the expenditure of a dollar; it is simply a preliminary survey to obtain information whether an expenditure would be warranted. It is therefore a matter that I am sure the Senate would accept from the hands of the committee under the recommendation of the Navy Department. It is purely a question of raising a board of survey to give us the basis for a proper appropriation to complete or to sell and get rid of these iron boats now resting in the yards unfinished. It will not require fifteen minutes I think after the joint resolution is taken up.

Mr. McPHERSON. I will say to the honorable Senator from Delaware that I wish to submit some remarks on the question, which will probably consume half an hour; but I hope to have the question disposed of before the expiration of the morning hour. I move to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Is that motion in order under the action taken on Thursday?

Mr. INGALLS. By special agreement, made at the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] the bill (S. No. 152) for the relief of Thomas Lucas was placed at the head of the Calendar for action this morning. I ask that that bill be now taken up for consideration.

Mr. KERNAN. The Senator from Kansas will remember that after that was done, and during the morning hour when Senate bill No. 1160 was reached, I asked that it should stand at the head of the Calendar in place of the other bills which were to come up. The bill of which I speak was reached during the morning hour just as it was about expiring. I understood that my proposition was assented to, and that bill hence does stand now at the head of the Calendar, the other two being next to it. I did not object to the other two bills being placed at the head of the Calendar, although I saw it might drive Senate bill No. 1160 over the morning hour to-day. I hope that this bill which stands at the head of the Calendar in reference to the centennial celebration of 1883 may keep its place. I think, if my friend from New Jersey will allow us to occupy the morning hour with the Calendar, that very likely there will be time after the morning hour to get the joint resolution he moves taken up, and we shall make more progress and proceed more satisfactorily than to spend so much time each morning trying to get bills taken up in the morning hour which are not reached on the Calendar. I hope therefore this bill will keep its place on the Calendar. I appealed to the gentlemen interested in the other two bills, and this was taken up, its title read, and it was understood, as the Chair answered when my colleague inquired, that it would stand first on the Calendar; and it was so understood by us all.

Mr. INGALLS. The question is whether the first or the last agreement of the Senate shall stand. If the Chair will refer to page 49 of Friday's RECORD containing the proceedings of Thursday last, he will find that I requested that the bill for the relief of Thomas Lucas might go on the Calendar as the first bill for Monday morning, at the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] objected, but subsequently withdrew his objection. The Vice-President then said:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not object to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request is granted.

The agreement to which the Senator from New York [Mr. KERNAN] refers was made subsequently to this. Whether it would displace it or not is a question I suppose of legal interpretation, something like the interpretation of a will, whether the first or the last declaration of the testator should stand.

Mr. KERNAN. It will be found on page 53 of the same RECORD that this occurred:

Mr. EATON. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

That was just after the report made by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] on the soldiers' reunion in Nebraska, and at the close of the legislative business for the day.

Mr. KERNAN. I wish to ask the Chair a question. Is there any bill pending on the Calendar now before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is the consideration of the Geneva award bill.

Mr. KERNAN. But I wish the Senate to notice that the bill next in the regular call of the Calendar is Senate bill No. 1160. I ask that it be taken up and its title read so that it may be the Calendar bill for Monday.

I supposed that by the reading of the title then it would stand first, its consideration having been commenced.

Two bills that have been passed over have been ordered ahead of this for Monday. I think this bill ought to take its proper place.

Then the Chair ordered it ahead of those bills unless we could get it up on Thursday:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first bill on the Calendar on the next call is the bill (S. No. 1160) to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the treaty of peace and the recognition of American Independence by holding an international exhibition of arts, manufactures, and the products of the soil and mine, in the city of New York, in the State of New York, in the year 1883.

Mr. KERNAN. That will stand at the head of the Calendar on Monday?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It would, except for the two bills that were preferred this morning.

Mr. KERNAN. I think the gentlemen in charge of those bills will not object to my request, as I did not object to theirs. As this bill is now next in order and has been pending a good while, I hope they will allow it to be taken up to-day so that it may stand before those two. I hope the Senators will yield to that. The gentlemen say they have no objection to that.

One of the gentlemen was here and so answered. I do not know whether the Senator from Kansas was in or not.

I ask that it be taken up now and read by its title, and then the Senator from Connecticut can make his motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The title will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the title of Senate bill No. 1160.

I appealed to the gentlemen whose bills had lost their place on the Calendar, as I did not object to their bills coming back, that they allow the title of this bill to be read so that it should stand first for to-day; and it was done. That is all I wish to say about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Calendar as arranged is in accordance with the understanding of the Chair and the Secretary.

Mr. McPHERSON. In order that we may proceed with the consideration of something, and not waste all of the morning hour in idle discussion, I withdraw my motion to consider House joint resolution No. 237, with the notice that I shall renew the motion immediately after the morning hour.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION OF 1883.

The bill (S. No. 1160) to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the treaty of peace and the recognition of American Independence by holding an international exhibition of arts, manufactures, and the products of the soil and mine, in the city of New York, in the State of New York, in the year 1883, was announced to be first on the Calendar.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

Mr. KERNAN. I ask that as the amendments are reached in the reading of the bill they be acted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to that order.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Finance was, in section 6, line 1, after the word "shall," to strike out "report" and insert "submit," and in line 2, after the word "Congress," to insert "for their consideration;" so as to read:

SEC. 6. That the said commission shall submit to Congress for their consideration at the first session after the appointment of commissioners, as herein provided, a suitable date for opening and closing the exhibition; a schedule of appropriate ceremonies for opening and dedicating the same; the requisite custom-house regulations for the introduction into this country of any articles from foreign countries intended for exhibition, and such other matters as in their judgment may be important.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was, in section 8, line 6, after the word "President," to insert "if after due examination he shall deem the preparations adequate," and after the word "shall," in line 13, to strike out "invite all foreign nations to take part in the said exhibition, and appoint representatives to" and insert "in behalf of the Government and people commend the exhibition to all foreign nations who may be pleased to take part therein;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. That whenever the President of the United States shall be informed by the governor of the State of New York that provision has been made for the erection of suitable buildings for the purpose, and for the exclusive control of the grounds and buildings by the corporation herein provided for, the President, if after due examination he shall deem the preparations adequate, shall, through the Department of State, make proclamation of the same, setting forth the time at which the exhibition will open and close, and the place at which it will be held; and he shall communicate to the diplomatic representatives of all nations copies of the same, together with such regulations as may be adopted by the commission, for publication in their respective countries, and shall in behalf of the Government and people commend the exhibition to all foreign nations who may be pleased to take part therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, after the word "purpose," in line 9, to strike out the residue of the section in the following words:

And it shall be lawful for any municipal or other corporate body, existing by or under the laws of the United States or of any State, to subscribe and pay for shares of said capital stock, and.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, line 1, after the word "the," to insert "first meeting of the," and in line 2, after the word "called," to strike out "together;" so as to read:

SEC. 11. The first meeting of the shareholders shall be called at the same time and in the same manner as provided for in the last section, and shall proceed to the election of twenty-five from their number, or from the members of the commission, who, when elected, shall, if not already so appointed, be ex officio members of said commission, and who, together with the executive officers of said commission, shall constitute a committee of finance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 13, line 7, after the word "designate" to insert "by due public notice;" so as to read:

SEC. 13. That the officers of said commission and the members of said committee of finance shall hold their respective positions for the term of one year from the day of their election, before the expiration of which time and for each year during which the commission shall exist a new election shall be held at such time and place as said commission shall designate by due public notice, and in the mode following, to wit: The members of the committee of finance shall first be elected by the shareholders, immediately after which the commission shall proceed to the election of its officers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 14, line 9, before the word "meeting," to strike out "annual."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 15, line 2, after the word "of," to insert "the amount actually paid in upon;" so as to read:

SEC. 15. That the corporation hereby created shall have authority to issue bonds not in excess of the amount actually paid in upon its capital stock, and secure the payment of the same, principal and interest, by mortgage upon its property and income, present and prospective.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 16, after the word "prepared," in line 3, to insert "at the cost of said commission," and in line 12, after the words "United States," to strike out "currency" and insert "notes;" so as to read:

SEC. 16. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, to cause to be prepared, at the cost of the said commission, in accordance with a design approved by the United States international commission and the Secretary of the Treasury, a sufficient number of certificates of stock to meet the requirements of this act; and any person found guilty of counterfeiting, or attempting to counterfeit, or knowingly circulating false certificates of stock herein authorized, shall be subject to the same pains and penalties as are or may be provided by law for counterfeiting United States notes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 17, line 6, after the word "duty," to insert "then;" so as to read:

SEC. 17. That as soon as practicable after the said exhibition shall have been closed, it shall be the duty of said corporation to convert its property into cash, and, after the payment of all its liabilities, to divide its remaining assets among its stockholders, pro rata, in full satisfaction and discharge of its capital stock. And it shall be the duty then of the United States international commission to submit, in a report to the President of the United States, the financial results of the international exhibition.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KERNAN. At the request of some of the promoters of this matter, I offer the following amendment, to come in the second section at line 25, after the word "O'Donohue:"

Charles Place, John A. Hardenbergh, Douglass Taylor, Peter Bowe, Stephen Hoe, Edward Cooper, Oswald Ottendorfer, Edward L. Carey, John Bigelow, Patrick O'Reilly, Calvert Vaux, Gustave H. Schwab, John Riley, Thomas J. Carleton, Frederick W. Whittemore.

Mr. THURMAN. This bill proposes two commissioners from each State and each of the Territories and from the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator from Ohio will allow the names of corporators to be settled as the Senator from New York proposes, then his question will come up.

Mr. THURMAN. It is on the amendment that I want to speak.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I thought it was on another point.

Mr. THURMAN. I want to show that there are quite enough names in this bill. There are thirty-eight States, nine Territories, and the District of Columbia, making forty-eight in all. Twice forty-eight would be ninety-six commissioners. Then there is a provision for alternates for them. Letting the alternates alone there are ninety-six commissioners. Then there are already in the bill, as near as I can tell by running over it hastily, about one hundred and twenty more names. That makes over two hundred names; and now it is proposed to add, I do not know how many more.

Mr. KERNAN. I will count them.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I do not pretend to be wise in the creation of such a scheme as this; but it strikes me, and I say it with great deference to those who have studied it, and those who know much more about it than I do, that this thing is already so cumbersome that it never can succeed as it ought to do if the bill be adopted in this way. Here is not only provision for two hundred and odd commissioners, to say nothing of the alternates, but then come the stockholders, who are expected to subscribe to the amount of $12,000,000 in shares of $10 each, and they are to elect a finance committee, and so you are to have, first, this body of commissioners; second, a finance committee; third, an executive committee; and fourth, the great body of stockholders who seem to have no function at all except to pay their money and vote for members of the finance committee. That seems to be all they have to do. It does seem to me, Mr. President, though it may be owing to my ignorance, that this is not a wise thing to do.

I wish to say now, once for all, that in my judgment the only way to make such a thing a perfect success is to appoint a very few men, the best men you can get for this purpose, and pay them a good and sufficient salary to enable them to devote their whole time to it. Then you may have some hope of success. But with all this ornamentation and paraphernalia of two commissioners from each State and two from each Territory and two from the District of Columbia, and then a set of honorary gentlemen who are already named here, it does seem to me that it is more likely to break down of its own weight than to be a success.

While I am up, for I do not propose to say a word more about this bill, I desire to say that I shall want my friend from New York, before he requires us to vote on this bill, to tell me where he gets the power of Congress to create this corporation.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I do not intend to consume time on this bill. I was not a member of this body when the bill was passed providing for a centennial celebration and exhibition at Philadelphia—

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator pardon me now? I do not wish to be understood as opposing the celebration in New York. I should be really glad to see it take place and to see it a magnificent success.

Mr. KERNAN. Gentlemen from the city of New York who take an interest in this matter brought me this bill prepared. They are anxious to have a creditable celebration and international exhibition of arts and manufactures on behalf of the people of the United States. They realize what I am certain of, that it must be done without calling upon the public Treasury, and the bill is framed carefully so that the expense shall be borne by those who do take an interest, who have consented, as I am told, to have their names put in the bill. The commissioners from other States are not expected probably to take much part or spend much time in raising money. These gentlemen named in the bill expect to be able to raise through their influence and weight of character money enough from stockholders to provide for a creditable celebration and exhibition. They do not expect to have a small body of men paid salaries to do it. As I understand, they expect, with the exception of some clerk hire, and so forth, that the labor shall be done gratuitously; at any rate, the stockholders will control that matter.

I was informed—others may know better—that experienced gentlemen from other States who had acted in the celebration and exhibition at Philadelphia advised as to this bill, and they thought that they had provided by this bill a much better bill than the law under which the Philadelphia international exhibition was held, and under which if it becomes a law there will be less conflict than arose under that law—in this bill commissioners and a finance committee elected by the stockholders controlling the action of the commission and acting in harmony.

This bill was referred to a sub-committee of the Committee on Finance. One of the gentlemen on it was the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE,] who has had considerable information and experience in reference to the exhibition held, under a former law enacted by Congress, at Philadelphia a few years ago, and he reported this to the committee with certain amendments, and the committee were of opinion that the bill before the Senate should be passed. Intelligent parties ask for its passage. If the exhibition is a failure it will be their failure, and I think they, from their character and intelligence and the influence they have with men of means, will make the exhibition proposed a success.

As to the power, I have seen bills creating corporations passed here, and some passed before I came here, which required a much more questionable exercise of power than this. This is for a purely national purpose. It is to be done at the expense of those who promote it. It simply gives them a corporate existence for a purpose, and only while that purpose is being carried out, which no State can well accomplish. This bill gives to the exhibition a national character, which it ought to have. I think the power results from various provisions of the Constitution—the commercial clause, the authority to promote the general welfare. I do not think there is any serious trouble on the question of the power of Congress to create a corporation like this for a national purpose, for a purpose that can not be accomplished by a State corporation.

I have favored this bill on the advice of gentlemen in whom I have confidence. They prepared the bill and the committee have amended it in some particulars. The Government is not to furnish any money. I trust, therefore, that these parties will have the opportunity of trying to do what they say and I believe they can do under this bill for a purpose that the American people will certainly sympathize with and will be glad to have succeed.

We have stricken out everything which implies any pecuniary liability on the part of the Government. These gentlemen wish to proceed, and the fact that they are numerous is an indication that they want to get a large body of men of means from the various business houses and firms in New York as commissioners, they consenting, that they may have their influence to raise the money and make this a success. They want the commissioners of other States, that they may have representatives from those States. I think in every such matter you must have a large number, and they are all controlled in the expenditure of money by the votes of the men who subscribe it and pay it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. THURMAN. I am not going to make a speech; I only want to say to my friend that I hope he will stand by the old interpretation of the fathers upon the words "to provide for the common defense and promote the general welfare" of the United States, and hold, as they did, that they did not create a substantive power at all. It is not a substantive, independent power conferred upon Congress; but Congress has only the power to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States in the mode that is provided; that is, according to the other powers that are conferred upon Congress by the Constitution.

It is one of the most fatal doctrines that ever crept into the interpretation of the Constitution, and tends more to centralization than anything else, to say that Congress has a general substantive power to provide for the general welfare, for that would be a power wholly without limitation.

Mr. KERNAN. I follow my friend, in whom I have so much confidence, in strict notions about the powers of the Government; but I am not afraid to vote for this bill. We have power to let our people celebrate a great event for the whole country by giving them permission to do it for a couple of years.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think that section 7 is quite well enough guarded. I should like to have it distinctly understood that there is no obligation on the part of the United States for anything connected with this commission or celebration.

Section 7 now reads:

SEC. 7. That no compensation for services shall be paid to said commission, its officers or agents, from the Treasury of the United States, and the United States shall not be liable for any expenses attending such exhibition, or accruing by reason of the same.

I hope the Senator from New York will accept a substitute which I offer for that section.

Mr. KERNAN. Allow me a moment before that is read, to ask the Senator to read what is on the top of page 11 of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I saw that; I have read the whole bill. I move as a substitute for section 7 the following:

That the United States shall not in any manner or under any circumstances be liable for any of the acts, doings, proceedings, or representations of the said commission, its officers, agents, servants, or employees, or any of them, or for the services, salaries, labors, or wages of said officers, agents, servants, or employees, or any of them, or any subscription to the capital stock, or for any certificates of stock, bonds, mortgages, or obligations of any kind issued to aid the commission, or for any debts, liabilities, or expenses of any kind whatever attending such commission or exhibition, or accruing by reason of the same.

Mr. KERNAN. I supposed this language in section 16, at the top of page 11, would be sufficient:

But nothing in this act shall be so construed as to create any liability of the United States, direct or indirect, for any debt or obligation incurred, nor for any claim by the United States international commission for aid or pecuniary assistance from Congress or the Treasury of the United States in support or liquidation of any debts or obligations created by said commission.

If that is not sufficiently guarded, I do not know what could be.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is a great improvement upon the provision of the section he refers to, but I think it would be better to have that amendment come in at the end of the bill, striking out the provision that is in the middle of it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to striking out section 7 and inserting my amendment at the end of the bill as a section to be correctly numbered.

Mr. KERNAN. I make no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it come last, so that like the codicil of a will it will be the very last and most important.

There are so many questions about this bill, Mr. President, in respect of power and adjustment, &c., that I do not think it is one of the bills which we can properly consider under the five-minute rule that we are proceeding under about short bills. While I entirely agree with what the Senator from Ohio has said with respect to the desirability of having an exposition of this kind, not only as a great celebration as the Senator from New York very properly calls it, but as a means of communicating to people of other nations information of the resources, the manufactures, and the mineral products of the people of the United States and of promoting international harmony and international communication and a knowledge on the part of our people of what other nations are doing in industrial arts, and while therefore I am heartily in favor, as far as I can constitutionally be, of this scheme, yet it is desirable for the good of everybody that it shall be most carefully scrutinized so that every person may understand it alike and know exactly what it means. There are a great many things that raise questions of doubt, not only in my mind but in that of sundry Senators about me, and therefore I suggest that the bill go over with the expectation, which I should cheerfully aid in, of having it taken up in regular course at the earliest opportunity now that attention is drawn to it, for consideration.

Mr. THURMAN. At half past one the Geneva award bill comes up. If we are still on the Centennial bill, it will be the unfinished business for to-morrow in the morning hour, will it not?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be called first in order on taking up the Calendar.

Mr. KERNAN. I ask Senators to look at it, for I want it perfected, and I want it acted on as soon as I can.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate proceeds to the consideration of its unfinished business.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2518) for the relief of Nelson Lyon and Jeremiah S. James.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 255) for the relief of Robert L. Martin; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. No. 1153) to restore to the public domain the military reservation known as the Fort Ripley reservation, in the State of Minnesota, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. No. 1229) to authorize and direct the Commissioner of Agriculture to attend, in person or by deputy, the international sheep and wool show, to be held in the Centennial buildings, Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, in September, A. D. 1890, and to make a full and complete report of the same, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 5258) appropriating money to provide for the public printing;

A bill (H. R. No. 3559) for the relief of L. H. Hershfield & Brother; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 68) to authorize the printing of 13,000 copies of the Report on Sheep Husbandry.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 255) for the relief of Robert L. Martin was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

VENEZUELAN COMMISSION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of January 29, 1880, information in relation to the awards of the mixed commission organized under the treaty of April 25, 1866, between the United States and Venezuela; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

AGREEMENT WITH UTE INDIANS.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 1509) to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado, for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

GENEVA AWARD FUND.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1194) for reviving and continuing the court of commissioners of Alabama claims, and for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award, the pending question being on the amendment submitted by Mr. HOAR on the 17th instant.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I move that the unfinished business and all prior orders be laid aside for the purpose of considering at this time the joint resolution (H. R. No. 237) directing the Secretary of the Navy to organize a board to inquire into the present condition of the double-turreted monitors and the propriety and cost of completing said vessels.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope that will not be done. That will displace the Geneva award bill, and I do not know when I shall be able to get it up again. If there is any Senator now ready to speak on the Geneva award bill, let him speak; I shall be very glad to hear him. If there is not, then the bill can by unanimous consent be laid aside informally, and then the Senator from New Jersey can get up his matter.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Then I ask that the Geneva award bill be laid aside informally.

Mr. THURMAN. But before that is done I have a motion to make in respect to the bill, and then I wish to inquire whether there is any one prepared to take the floor. As I understand, the pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so remembers.

Mr. THURMAN. I move to strike out of that amendment the words beginning with the word "and," in line 8 of section 4, down to the end of that section, and I ask that the words be reported.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to make an inquiry here, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the motion which the Senator from Ohio proposes to submit will be in order.

Mr. THURMAN. Why is it not in order to move to amend an amendment?

Mr. HAMLIN. I think it is in the third degree.

Mr. THURMAN. How?

Mr. HAMLIN. The Senator from Ohio reports the bill, as I understand it; the Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDONALD] proposes an amendment—

Mr. THURMAN. He has never offered his.

Mr. HAMLIN. Ah!

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator from Indiana had an amendment, which was laid on the table and printed.

Mr. HAMLIN. Very well; then the Senator's motion is in order.

Mr. THURMAN. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. HAMLIN. I thought the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] was an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. THURMAN. Not at all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Ohio state the amendment again in order that the Secretary may get it correctly?

Mr. THURMAN. I move to strike out all after the semicolon in line 8 of section 4, to the end of that section.

The Chief Clerk read the matter proposed by Mr. THURMAN to be stricken out of Mr. HOAR's amendment, as follows:

And shall also consider and allow, as a second class, claims for the payment of premiums for war-risks, whether paid to corporations, agents, or individuals, after the sailing of any confederate cruiser; in determining which it shall be the duty of the court to deduct any sum in any way received by or paid to the claimant in diminution of the amount paid for any such premium, so that the actual loss only shall be allowed.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to state in a word the object of this amendment that I offer, and not to argue it. I move to strike out these words from the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts in order to present the distinct point, and to present it not in connection with anything else but the sole and distinct point whether a majority of the Senate is willing to provide for the payment of war premiums. War premiums were expressly excluded by the Geneva tribunal. They were not only excluded, but they were not insisted upon by our Government. Not one single dollar, not one penny was ever awarded to us in respect of enhanced insurance or war premiums. Everything of that sort was expressly excluded; not excluded by implication but expressly excluded, so that for the enhanced rates of insurance, or war premiums as they are called, this Government has never received one penny, and I want the Senate to vote, if I can get them to do it, upon that single distinct proposition. Let us go on step by step and find out for what we will provide, and if we can by elimination get at what we are willing ultimately to provide for, perhaps that mode of procedure to arrive at a decision is the best mode we can adopt.

I make these remarks now so that the gentlemen who are in favor of allowing war premiums, what are called the war-premium men, may have full notice of the effect of the motion which I have made to amend the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts and let them address themselves to that subject when they see fit to address the Senate.

Mr. HAMLIN. Before the Senator takes his seat I wish to understand clearly his proposition. I understand the argument of the Senator distinctly; but I wish to inquire of him if what were known as the vessels destroyed by the exculpated cruisers, and provision for which as I understand is contained in the bill reported by the committee after certain others are taken care of, were not equally excluded by the tribunal at Geneva?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly they were.

Mr. HAMLIN. That is all.

Mr. THURMAN. Undoubtedly they were; and if there were no more money in the Treasury of the United States than would pay those whose losses were provided for by the Geneva tribunal, I for one, would say, when you have paid them, there stop. But there are likely to be several millions more than is necessary to pay those whose losses were made the foundation of the adjudication at Geneva. Then the question is, what shall Congress do with that money? Shall it return it to Great Britain, or shall it dispose of it? I have reasons, which when I come to speak on this subject I may take the trouble to state, why I do not believe we are under any moral obligations to return a dollar of the award to Great Britain. What, then, are we to do with it? Are we to keep it in the Treasury to use it as part of the general resources of the Treasury in defraying the expenses of Government, or are we to make some disposition of it which shall help to alleviate the losses of the men who suffered in the war? I think we ought to do the latter.

And then comes a question between two classes, between the war-premium men and the men who lost their property by what are called the exculpated cruisers. Has either one of them priority over the other? In my judgment they are both subordinate to the first class provided for in the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee, that class upon whose losses, and upon whose losses alone, the award was made. But there is a surplus after all are paid whose claims procured the money for us. Then is there any priority, or ought there to be, between the war-premium men and the men whose property was destroyed by the exculpated cruisers? I think there ought to be. I think one class has precedence over the other in the strength of its claim upon the generosity of the Government. I think that those whose property was destroyed by the exculpated cruisers stand in a better light, not demanding, but asking of the Government to alleviate their losses, than do the men who simply paid enhanced rates of insurance.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. THURMAN. With great pleasure.

Mr. CONKLING. If I am right in my understanding of a fact, touching which the Senator answers the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] his answer concedes too much, I suggest to him, and is calculated to mislead those who listen for information. The Senator from Maine asked the Senator from Ohio whether those who suffered from the exculpated cruisers were not equally excluded by the Geneva tribunal, and the Senator from Ohio answered in the affirmative. I do not so understand it, and I will state, if I may be allowed, my understanding for his correction.

War premiums, enhanced rates of insurance, were denominated "consequential damages," and they so figured in the American case. What did the tribunal decide? That it had no jurisdiction whatever of such claims; in other words, that they were not embraced within the treaty. Am I not right? That no jurisdiction, no power whatever to deal with them was conferred by the treaty upon the tribunal. Coming now to the case of the exculpated cruisers, what did the tribunal decide? Not that they had no jurisdiction, not that the subject was foreign entirely to the tribunal; but they adjudged as matter of fact touching certain named cruisers that no recovery could be had in respect of them, but it was mere matter of fact. Varying the facts, varying the dates, the cruisers would not have been exculpated. In other words, it was part of the matter before the tribunal, and nothing stands in the way of these claimants, except a finding upon the question of fact, whereas in respect of the other claim, to wit, for enhanced insurance, they found that upon any conceivable state of facts it was not within the treaty.

I may not make clear to the Senate or to the Senator the distinction which arises in my mind; but it seems to me the Senator from Ohio could make it so clear as not to require him to admit that so far as the action of the tribunal is concerned, these two classes of claims stand upon a par. If they do, I have been perpetually misled.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I have not before me at this moment the proceedings of the Geneva tribunal. I am not absolutely certain, speaking from recollection alone, whether the war premiums were among the classes of claims that the Geneva tribunal decided that it had no jurisdiction to consider.

Mr. CONKLING. My recollection is distinct that they were.

Mr. THURMAN. That is my impression and I should have said unhesitatingly that they were if a Senator had not said a day or two ago in his speech that they were not, and that they were excluded afterward, not upon the ground of the want of jurisdiction but upon the ground that they did not come within any of the three rules or the principles of international law applicable. But there should be no trouble about that.

I have said that I think those who lost their property by the exculpated cruisers have a better claim upon the generosity of this Government or upon its moral sense than the war-premium men. Indeed I have never been able for one single moment to see how any man could stand better because he had insured his property in an insurance company and there paid for the insurance an enhanced rate than does the man who was his own insurer, who did not insure at all, and therefore was his own insurer, as the American phrase is.

Mr. BLAINE. Where do these two claims come in conflict or comparison? Where does the honorable Senator from Ohio see any conflict between these two?

Mr. THURMAN. A most marked conflict in all the propositions proposed here by way of amendments to the Judiciary Committee bill. Every one of them provides for the payment of these war premiums as premiums paid to insurance companies.

Mr. BLAINE. But how does any advocate of paying the war premiums say or imply that that claim is better than somebody's claim who lost his ship?

Mr. THURMAN. When the vote comes the Senator will find men who will vote for the war premiums, and will not vote a dollar to pay for losses by the exculpated cruisers. If he does not know it now, he will find it out before he gets through. This is not the first time we have had this subject in the Senate, and I know very well that there are Senators who think that the war-premium men ought to be paid, and that those who suffered by the exculpated cruisers ought not to be paid at all, or else that they ought to come in in subordination as a third class after the war-premium men are paid. My argument is addressed to that. I say just exactly the reverse is the truth. Those who sustained losses by the exculpated cruisers have a better equity, a better claim on our generosity or our sense of justice, if you call it so, than those who paid war premiums. Besides that, what a field does this thing of paying war premiums open up? Why did these men pay war premiums? Would they have carried on their business if they could not pay the war premiums and make a profit? And if they charged war premiums on the cost of their goods and then made profit on them when they sold them to the people of the United States, it is the people of the United States that paid the war premiums and not the merchants. I should like some one to explain why that is not so.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the honorable Senator allow me to explain it to him now?

Mr. THURMAN. Any time. I should rather the Senator would take the floor and go on. I did not get up to make a speech.

Mr. BLAINE. I did not get up to make a speech, either; but as the Senator has put that question and asked an explanation, I should like to give it.

While the honorable Senator must be credited with a very extensive knowledge of law, I doubt whether he has as accurate a knowledge of, or practical experience in, navigation as some others. The honorable Senator says that all the men had to do who paid a war premium was to charge it in and it was finally paid by the consumer. Now, to show how utterly fallacious that statement is, let me give the actual facts.

Here are two ships side by side at Liverpool or any foreign port. One flies the British flag; one the American. They are competitors for trade to any port on the surface of the globe. When the American ship has to pay a large premium for insurance against war risk, does the honorable Senator, as a practical business man, say that the merchant who has freight to send will agree to pay that much more than the English ship is charging? And yet he tells us here that all the American owner had to do was to charge it in.

Mr. DAWES. And charge it in the same market.

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly. The American ship not only had to pay that and get no extra consideration therefor, but even after it paid the insurance it did not stand upon a par with the British ship. If the honorable Senator from Ohio were a merchant in Liverpool, instead of a Senator in America, and if he had a great freight to dispatch to a distant part of the globe, he would have argued in this way: "Even if I send it on this ship and insure my freight, I am liable to lose my property, because this ship may be taken by a confederate cruiser and never reach her port; but if I send it on an English ship, with the flag of England floating over her, no confederate will touch her, and therefore my freight will go straight through." And there stood the American owner, not doing as a great many other Americans did, (with whom I will find no fault,) not seeking a refuge under the British flag, as so many Americans did—these men of whom we speak now were the men who adhered to the flag, and who, if there be a sentiment of nationality or patriotism in standing out boldly and risking everything, they themselves exhibited it. Why, they said: "We will go down and lose this ship and all we have got rather than sail under any other flag than the American flag, and we will pay these heavy risks, and we will keep this flag floating, and we will incur all the dangers; we will share and share alike in the perils of those that are on shore fighting for nationality and for victory;" and in that way the American ship-owner was bled to death. I have a letter from one who had a ship in the harbor of Buenos Ayres, and a cargo was to be dispatched to Portland, Maine, and its shipper said: "I cannot afford to send by you, even upon insurance, because the confederate cruisers are so thick that I am not sure you will reach there, and although you will insure my freight and give me better rates, yet I am compelled to send by the English vessel, because I know she will not be disturbed."

In the face of facts like these, everywhere patent and everywhere admitted, the honorable Senator from Ohio says that all the men who paid a war-risk had to do was to charge it into his freight, to charge it over to the consumer!

The honorable Senator from Ohio ought to know that not only in this case but in all cases the navigation interest is the one which receives no protection from the Government of the United States. The man who builds and sails a United States vessel in the foreign trade derives and receives no advantage whatever in any manner, in any direction, either in peace or in war; and in war he was literally trampled out because of his devotion to the flag and his determination to uphold it.

Now, as to the distinction between those who will vote for the war premiums and refuses to vote for those who lost at the hands of ex-culpated cruisers, I have not met such an one. The Senator says there are a great many on the floor. If there be, I do not know any of them. I thought I knew something of the personnel of the vote. I do not make any assertion about it; but I have never yet met one in conversation who was not willing to make a distribution to those who were actual losers.

And while I am on the floor, just for a few minutes, I wish to say another thing. We hear a great deal about the computation that was made and about what was taken into the account, and what were the items rendered in the Geneva award. I certainly should not wish to say a word against the very respectable gentlemen from the different nations who composed that tribunal; but we learn from Mr. Staempfli, I believe it was, the Swiss commissioner, that Great Britain had put in a little memorandum of account admitting about $7,000,000 of liabilities, that we had put in a larger account, claiming some twenty-two or twenty-three millions liability. Mr. Staempfli went up into a high mountain in Switzerland for six or eight weeks, or less or more—I have forgotten what the period was—to make this calculation; and after he had taken all the elements that were before him into account, what result did he produce? He produced exactly the result that an Ohio or a Maine farmer would have produced in a dispute between neighbors. Chalking on the barn door he split the difference. Said he, "England has admitted about seven millions, and the United States have claimed between twenty-two or twenty-three millions; I think it is about fifteen or fifteen and a half millions," and he came in with that calculation, and in my judgment there never was anything in the whole process but an old-fashioned chalking on the barn door.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I do not know whether Mr. Staempfli was accustomed to keep a chalk-mark on a barn-door or a cellar-door; but it is very certain that we have nothing in the record of that proceeding which shows that any such homespun mode was adopted in getting at this award. As to that, however, I do not care one way or the other; but as to the claims in respect of which the award was made, it is simply impossible for anybody in this wide world to deny what is the truth. After the claims for consequential damages had been thrown out, after it had been decided that the tribunal would not even consider them, after our Government had expressly withdrawn them all or nearly all, after the tribunal had decided that in respect to certain vessels Great Britain was liable and in respect to the rest she was not liable, then the claims which remained and which were the subject of this ciphering on a barn-door, as the Senator supposes, were the only claims in respect to which an award was made. There is no getting around that. It is just as plain as that two and two make four, and no rhetoric, no eloquence, nothing can rub out that plain, naked fact.

Now, Mr. President, in respect to the war-premium men, I have heard the same argument which the Senator from Maine has so strongly presented to-day, again and again and again whenever this subject has been up in the Senate; but he does not answer my point, at least he certainly does not to my satisfaction, and I do not think that he will be found to have answered it to anybody's satisfaction who will think over this subject and who will ascertain the facts. He says that because British ships could carry goods, therefore the American ship-owners who paid war risks, enhanced premiums of insurance, were trampled out of existence. If they were trampled out of existence, how is it that they have their claims here? If they did not carry on the business, if the American flag did not float over the high seas, if there were no American ships which were insured and paid war risks and the cargoes of which paid war risks, how comes it that there is this mighty class of war-premium men, far outnumbering all the other classes put together? It is because they were not driven off the sea; it is because their business was not struck down. Their profits may have been lessened, it is true, but if it had not paid profit they never would have carried on the business. Here is one of them, for instance, who paid war premiums on a vessel; she was lost or she was not lost. Suppose her to have been lost on her tenth trip, her nine trips have brought profit to the man quite sufficient to indemnify him for all the war premiums or enhanced rates of insurance he has paid. But the naked fact remains that they did carry on their business; and are the people of this country so stupid, are they so devoid of business tact, that year after year and year after year they carried on this business, paying these war risks and losing all the time? No, Mr. President, that cannot be.

But again, the Senator says that British ships brought the goods and no war risks were required to be paid on them, and hence the goods went all in British bottoms. Does he forget the coasting trade? Does he not know that from Nova Scotia all the way around to the most southern border of Texas no British ship could carry a pound of freight between American ports, and the same way on the Pacific coast? And were none of our coasting vessels lost? Were none of them taken by confederate cruisers? If the Senator will look over the list, he will find more than one. Here was protection to navigation; here is the greatest protection, considering the extent of this country, to navigation that ever was given by any country on the face of the earth except Great Britain with her colonies spread all over the earth. It will not do to say that there has been no protection given to American commerce or to American navigation.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the honorable Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MCPHERSON. How did it affect the coasting trade when all the southern ports were blockaded?

Mr. THURMAN. Why—

Mr. BLAINE. Does the honorable Senator from Ohio find many of these claims for losses in the coasting trade?

Mr. THURMAN. I think I can show a good many of them if the Senator will go over the list with me.

Mr. BLAINE. The amount is very small, I think.

Mr. THURMAN. It may not be very large. The answer to the question of my friend from New Jersey is that there was plenty of commerce, plenty of trading without the blockade. What was the blockade? There was a blockade of divers ports. There were many that were not blockaded that our coasting vessels could get into, but that the British could not get into.

Mr. BLAINE. The honorable Senator will teach me something that I should be glad to have him inform me on if he will tell me what those ports were that our ships were blockading and which American vessels in the coasting trade were in the habit of going into and coming out of?

Mr. THURMAN. I did not say that; the Senator entirely misunderstood me. I did not say American vessels could go into a port that was blockaded.

Mr. BLAINE. What port in the Confederate States, except where it was opened and had the Union flag flying in, did the coasting trade avail anything to the owners of American vessels?

Mr. THURMAN. That will do. The Senator has stated it well enough. We had the American flag flying a good deal. Did it not fly at Fortress Monroe? Did it not fly at Norfolk? Did it not fly at Wilmington after the fall of Fort Fisher? Did it not fly at Port Royal? Did it not fly at New Orleans? Did it not fly at Mobile?

Mr. BLAINE. Does the honorable Senator intend to say that at Cape Fear River and at Port Royal there was anything of trade going on except that which was connected with the military operations of the Government—any trading in the ordinary sense in which we speak of trade? Does the honorable Senator mean to say that?

Mr. THURMAN. I say that millions and millions of property went from New Orleans. Whether it all was got out honestly or not I do not pretend to say.

Mr. BLAINE. A great deal went from New Orleans honestly, and a great deal, I suppose, as the Senator intimates, may have gone out dishonestly; that I know nothing about. There was a great deal that went out honestly; and if the Senator will pardon my long interruption I will give him one instance that may convey to him a little of the hardship which he thinks was no hardship at all on American vessels. I knew a vessel built in the Kennebec Valley, where I reside, a large vessel, when cotton freights were beginning to go out a little from New Orleans, and when British ships could go in and out without fear of molestation, and it cost the owner of that vessel $5,000 in gold coin for insurance to put his ship in New Orleans sailing in ballast. That is but a single instance. He had to pay $5,000 in gold coin to these very insurance companies which the honorable Senator from Ohio thinks are so much in need of relief.

Now, I want to correct another remark of the honorable Senator. He says that the fact that vessels kept afloat is a proof that they were engaged in a profitable traffic. Does not the honorable Senator know enough about navigation to know that a ship-owner or ship-master will keep his ship afloat rather than he will let it rot in the harbor, if he does not make a dollar; that by so doing he is giving employment to sailors, he is in various ways conducing to the prosperity of the country, and is benefiting himself, rather than to allow his ship to rot at the wharf.

Mr. EATON. Even if he loses largely he will do it.

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly. That is true of many other branches of trade, as every gentleman knows, besides navigation. The honorable Senator from Ohio forgets also that from the time the danger set in of the confederate cruisers until it was gone by, nearly nine hundred thousand tons of American shipping, and the best of it too, large ships, took refuge under the British flag. They would not take the hazard, they would not pay the 25, 30, 35, and 40 per cent. insurance, and have their profit all knocked out, and they chose rather to haul down the flag of the United States and run up the flag of a foreign country; and they did it.

I say I am not here finding fault with them or criticising them. I am only pleading the cause of those men who, against all trial and all temptation and against all fear of loss, boldly and defiantly sailed their ships throughout the entire period of the war under the protection of the American flag, believing, as they did every day that they put by a receipt for insurance paid, that it was a claim against the government of Great Britain which the great Government which they were serving would in the end enforce. There was not a ship-master along the Atlantic coast that did not believe in his heart every time he paid a premium on a policy of insurance that that would be made good to him after the war was over; and the faithfulness with which all these receipts are now produced, the regularity with which they were filed, the very indorsements on their back, show that they put confidence in the Government of the United States.

And when the honorable Senator from Ohio says that those claims were withdrawn, and that that deprives them of all right to a share in this fund, I ask him who put forward those claims? It was the Government of the United States. It certainly does not then become the Government of the United States, represented in one of its great departments on this floor, to cast a doubt or throw suspicion or discredit on those claims. It stood before the world arguing their equity and their justice, and when it withdrew them did so in order that settlement might the more easily be made with Great Britain, which was important not only to the navigation interest, but to all the interests of this great country; and the generosity of the policy which the honorable Senator from Ohio is now advocating consists in pushing forward these poor ship-owners that were bled to death during the war and offering them up in expiation as a sacrifice that all other interests of this country might go free, and have peace with Great Britain at their expense.

That is the position in which the honorable Senator put these claims. They were withdrawn for the purpose I have named, and there never was a more honorable obligation incurred in this world than the United States incurred then. It said in effect to these ship-owners "if we insist on these claims, we shall have trouble with Great Britain; we withdraw them for the sake of peace, but we will make them good to you out of the fund which we specially instructed our commissioners should never be accepted with any specific mode of distribution attached. Leave it to us to deal with it as shall seem just and equitable in our judgment." That, sir, was in effect the assurance which the United States gave to these ship-owners, and it should now redeem its promise.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, if I were a betting man, which I am not, I would give longer odds than ever were given on the race-course that there will not be a Senator who will speak in favor of this Judiciary Committee bill that the Senator from Maine will not stick his speech right in the center of the speech of the Senator who is speaking, and do it more than once. I do not complain of it, although it is a very bad habit. It is a very bad habit to thrust one's speech right into the midst of another speech and break the whole chain of the argument.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator said he was not going to make a speech.

Mr. THURMAN. I was not going to make a speech; I was answering something that had been said by the Senator from Maine. I was very anxious for the Senator from Maine to take the floor and make his speech. I did not care how earnestly he spoke; I did not care how much he extolled the patriotism of the men who paid war premiums and the like and who sailed the flag. I did not care how much he did that; I supposed that the Senate would in the end come to decide this matter upon the plain and naked principles of law upon which the case depends.

Now, sir, this is getting to be very rambling for the Senator goes off from one point to another as the ideas happen to come into his mind. He says that I do not know much about navigation or I would know that the ship-owners would rather lose their ships than let them rot at the wharf instead of going to sea. Well, if that was the case, I do not see precisely where their patriotism, about which the Senator has spoken with such fervor, comes in. A while ago these ships sailed the ocean with the Stars and Stripes at the mast-head out of patriotism. They would not pull down the old flag—not they. It was just to show that flag on the broad seas and in the face of all enemies, out of pure patriotism, that they made it float on the high seas. Now, the Senator says that was not it at all; it was because they would rather lose their ships than have them rot at the wharves—a mere matter of profit and loss—better run out and run the risk of being taken by a confederate cruiser and being destroyed than to await the certain destruction of rotting as an old hulk at the wharf. If that is not taking patriotism out of the argument, I do not understand what it is.

But, Mr. President, what does the Senator say to the man who freighted the ship? He had no goods to rot at the wharf; he did not buy goods in Liverpool or London or Havre or Bordeaux, because he wanted to keep them from rotting at the wharf; he did not freight an American ship with goods that he had purchased, or goods that he had sent out, to keep them from rotting at the wharf. No, the American merchant that did that did it because there was money in it as he believed, and he would have stopped it the moment he found there was not money in it.

But, Mr. President, pray what better is a man who, as I said before, has paid a war risk to an insurance company than the man who owned his ship and had no insurance at all? Will some one tell me that? If a ship sailed and was captured by an exultant cruiser, this bill of the Judiciary Committee proposes to pay the owner, that she shall have her claim; the amendment of the Senator from Indiana proposes that the owner shall have his claim upon this fund. If I understand—I confess, however, that I do not understand it—the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, he proposes that that man shall be paid for his loss. But now take the case of an uninsured ship that was not captured by a confederate cruiser, that upheld the flag, that carried the Stars and Stripes always at the mast-head, that would not for a moment think of surrendering the American commerce to the English people. Take that ship; she made her trip and she made it safely. The man who owned her did not insure. The men who owned the goods with which she was freighted did not insure them. She came in safely. Now will the Senator from Maine tell me why the man who owned that ship should not be paid war-premium risks? He was his own insurer. Shall not the man who freighted that ship be paid war-premium risks too? He was his own insurer. Why should he not stand on just as good a foundation as the man who went to an insurance company and took out a war risk? Nobody I think can say that one ought to be allowed and the other to be excluded; and yet plenty of that commerce went on where men took out no insurance either on vessel or cargo, and neither was ever captured by the confederate cruisers, and who carried the flag at the mast-head all the time, and did just as much to sustain American commerce on the high seas as did any men who were insured, however great may have been the war risk.

But it was not my purpose, Mr. President, to go into any large discussion to-day. I have been drawn into it. I should not have spoken five or ten minutes (I only intended to explain my amendment) but for the remarks of the Senator from Maine, and I do not complain of them. I have only now to say that the Senator from Illinois desires to speak on this bill, but is not prepared to do so to-day; and if there is any other Senator on either side who wishes to speak, I hope he will proceed.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to say a few words before the honorable Senator dismisses the bill, if it is to be put aside to-day.

Mr. THURMAN. I am perfectly willing. I only wished to say that when every one who is prepared to speak to-day has spoken, then I hope the Senator from Illinois will take the floor, and that the discussion will proceed to-morrow, and that some day this week we shall come to a vote on this bill.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not rise to occupy any time or to go into any elaborate argument, but only to answer the legal conundrum which the honorable Senator from Ohio puts. He wishes to know why a man who sailed his ship without insurance, if she went through all safe, is not just as much entitled to some indemnity for a loss which she did not make as the man who had a loss actually incurred. I think that conundrum answers itself. We are here—we are here to indemnify somebody. The honorable Senator thinks it is indemnity to give money to an insurance company that made profits and had no loss. We are here to indemnify somebody, and the honorable Senator thinks it is indemnity to give it to a ship-owner who sailed his ship with profit and met no loss, and he asks, why not?

Mr. THURMAN. I want a moment. If I caught the Senator's remark aright, it would import that nobody asked war premiums unless the ship or freight that was insured was lost.

Mr. BLAINE. Oh, no; I do not say any such thing. I said the honorable Senator—and I will endeavor to state him with perfect candor and fairness—put this legal conundrum, that here was a ship-owner who sailed his ship without insurance, and she went through all safe; nothing happened to her; and she got her freight and made her profits; and now he says why should not that man be paid just as well as the man who incurred a loss by paying a large war premium.

Mr. THURMAN. And whose ship and freight also went through safe.

Mr. BLAINE. Here two soldiers go into the Army, and they are both clean-limbed, strong, able-bodied young men, and they are standing side by side in the regiment, and they incur precisely the same risk, but one gets his leg shot off and the other comes out whole in body and perfect in health; and the honorable Senator from Ohio says, "Why in the world give a pension to that man who got his leg shot off when this one right alongside took just as much risk as he did and ought to have just as much pay." There is just as much sense and consistency in the one argument as there is in the other. The honorable Senator will excuse me for saying so. I think the analogy would hold good under the pressure of logic. In other words, I think the honorable Senator is confused, as far as my observation goes, upon it throughout on the whole of the application of the Geneva award. Probably he did not hear what I said on that point, and that is that this money is to indemnify somebody. I submit to the Senator that when you come to indemnify a man, he must show a loss. I never heard of a man asking to be indemnified for a profit. Yet here is a proposition to indemnify insurance companies for what they made; and the honorable Senator says that the owner of a ship that sailed the seas over without danger or peril or loss or delay, that went through smoothly and promptly as though no war had been raging, has as much right to indemnity as the man who incurred loss by piling mountain high charges against his account in the premiums he paid for insurance.

I will advise the Senator of another thing which probably he does not know as well as my friend from Connecticut and I who live on the coast. The old rule was that a man who had an interest in fourteen ships in time of peace could afford to sail them without insurance, because the insurance being about 7 per cent. and fourteen times seven in round numbers making one hundred he was his own insurer, and the chance was that if a man was rich enough to own fourteen or fifteen—my honorable friend from Connecticut knows how that was—the man who owned the whole or a piece of many vessels never insured; but the man who put his all in one vessel or in two would be ruined by a loss. The honorable Senator from Ohio can make that calculation very well.

I submit, therefore, that his whole argument is against the poor owner of a single ship or two ships and applies only in behalf of those who owned a sufficiently large number of ships to make the general possibility of loss on the same plane on which insurance companies themselves could afford to underwrite. Am I not right?

Mr. THURMAN. Totally wrong.

Mr. BLAINE. That is exactly the experience, and I can bring every ship-master in America to sustain me in that position. The honorable Senator, when he brings in men of the class of which he speaks, will find that they were men of capital, who could afford to take the risk, and if there was an exception it should be treated as an exception.

But I am not here, Mr. President, arguing against paying any man a loss which he can trace to the appearance of confederate cruisers on the surface of the ocean. I am here arguing for the sufferers by the exultant cruisers just as earnestly as I argue for the war-premium men. I am here arguing for insurance companies just as earnestly as the honorable Senator can do it—not as ably, but as earnestly—if he will put in the same condition that I put in in behalf of these others, namely, that the insurance company shall show that it was a loser. Any person or company or corporation that will come forward and prove a loss resulting from and directly traceable to the confederate cruisers that made navigation so dangerous and so losing a business—every one that can prove a loss is entitled in equity at the hands of the United States to be taken into consideration on the same basis; and those, I submit in conclusion, who cannot prove a loss are here under a pretense that seems almost ridiculous; for what can be more absurd than indemnifying a man for the profits he made.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, now the Senator from Maine has laid down a principle that I venture to tell him he will not stick to. The end of this week will not take place before he will back right out. I say it with due respect to him. He says he will not pay anybody but those who incurred loss, and he will put the man who paid war premiums on the same footing with the insurance company. I understand him to say, on the same broad principle of justice. So far as each of them sustained loss, so far shall each of them be indemnified, no further. How do you get at the insurance company to find whether it sustained loss or not? How did your bill of 1874 get at it? It got at it by saying that an insurance company should only claim for what it had paid, if after a full exhibit of all its business it appeared that the insurance company had lost money on its whole business. Will the Senator apply that to a man who paid war premiums and require him to furnish an exhibit of all his business to see whether upon his whole commerce and trade he made or lost money, and then if he did not lose, say that he shall have nothing for his war premium claims? No, the Senator will not do that. And yet that is just what he does in respect to the insurance companies. He says to the insurance companies, although it is a lawful business, although it is a business without which commerce could scarcely be carried on, although it is a business that every commercial nation has fostered since the first policy was ever underwritten, although it is a business that commercial men cherish as absolutely essential to the commerce of the world—he says you have sustained no loss unless upon a full balance-sheet of all your business about which you received war risks it appears that you have paid more than you received.

Then, when it comes to the question of the merchants who paid war risks, or when it comes to the question of the ship that paid war risks the Senator will not apply any such doctrine as that. Here is a ship that paid war risks, and it made nine successful trips, and made more than ten times perhaps the value of the ship. On the tenth trip it was lost. The Senator pays for the whole ship; he will not call for any balance-sheet to see whether in the nine trips that it made when it escaped the confederate cruisers it did not make nine times the amount of the value that was lost when it was taken on the tenth voyage. He will not have anything to do with that.

Here is a merchant who shipped goods and paid war premium risks upon them, and made money nine trips and on the tenth trip his goods were captured, and though his profits on the other nine ventures were five times or ten times or twenty times as much as the losses on the tenth venture, the Senator will not require him to make any exhibit of his balance-sheet at all, and pay him only in case the profit and loss account on the ledger shows that he has lost. The Senator not only pays war premiums upon the goods that were lost, but he pays war premiums on the nine cargoes of goods that were not lost. That is what the Senator proposes, and that is the claim of the war premium men.

The Senator will never stand up to that doctrine of indemnity which he has just now announced. I grant there should be indemnity, but if you apply one rule of indemnity to the case of the insurance companies, I want to know why you shall not apply the same rule throughout?

Mr. BLAINE. I should be perfectly willing to apply the rule as far as it is practicable; but I submit one further observation, that these insurance companies which the Senator says are essential to commerce—and I admit he is correct in that—according to his theory were not pursuing their business at all. Insurance implies risk. These men took their risk in the legitimate pursuit of their business, but according to the honorable Senator's theory they did not run any risk at all, for he says to them, You may go forward, insure these ships at a high rate, running as high sometimes as 40 per cent., and receive it all from these poor navigators, and then for every loss you make we will collect it all back again from Great Britain, and in the end will pay it to you, and therefore you have not taken a bit of risk; you have not only got your average chance of large profits, but the United States Government is going to stand by you and collect again and pay into your coffers all the possible losses that might occur to you on your risks. I beg the honorable Senator's attention to that—"all the premiums that are paid in to you on ships that are not lost are clear profit; as the boys in the printing office say, 'clean fat'; and wherever there is a vessel lost on which you have got to pay out something to the owner, we will stand behind you and pay that back out of the award which we will get from Great Britain." I submit that the honorable Senator is not confining the insurance companies to their legitimate business, for insurance implies risk. I am not going into a legal argument.

Mr. THURMAN. No, I think not.

Mr. BLAINE. I am not going into that, for I might make as many mistakes as the honorable Senator does about navigation. And as to the doctrine of subrogation, the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] if ever a case was demonstrated in this world, demonstrated that that doctrine did not apply in this case, and I wish the honorable Senator from Ohio to wrestle with him on that issue. I will not stop to show the little defects of knowledge which the honorable Senator may have about navigation as to a man making ten times the value of a ship in nine trips, which caused a little smile on the face of my friend from Connecticut, and caused a smile on the face of any man who ever smelt salt water. The honorable Senator evidently does not know anything about this question on the practical side of it, and is attempting to apply certain legal principles to it that have not any more application than they have to the Kingdom of Heaven, whose laws of justice they offend.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not pretend to know as much about navigation as a Maine man does.

Mr. BLAINE. Evidently not.

Mr. THURMAN. Evidently not; and I never knew anybody who did. [Laughter.] The gentlemen from that State have an exclusive knowledge upon that subject because they build so many ships. When their pine woods give out I do not know but their knowledge may decrease. But that is not the question here at all. The Senator, I imagine, has heard of such a thing as the right of subrogation.

Mr. BLAINE. I heard it all demolished the other day by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator did not hear it demolished at all. If the Senator ever gets to be a judge he will learn to hear both sides, and when he has heard both sides he will find that it is not in the slightest degree demolished or even touched by what he supposes to have been its demolition.

Mr. President—

[At this point Mr. THURMAN was seized with sudden illness and compelled to discontinue his remarks.]

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, the affliction under which my friend from Ohio labors is such that I ought to ask the Senate to lay aside the consideration of the pending matter, though it is of great public importance. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The Senator from Connecticut moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. One moment, if my friend from Connecticut will allow me. It was, I think, understood by the Senator from Ohio that at the expiration of the colloquy between himself and the Senator from Maine, if no other gentleman wanted to speak upon the bill now pending, it should be laid aside informally and another matter taken up in which my friend from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON] is concerned. I submit to the Senator from Connecticut whether we had not better take up the subject in which the Senator from New Jersey is concerned.

Mr. EATON. I will withdraw my motion for that purpose.

Mr. ALLISON. If this matter is to be laid aside, I understood that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] should have the floor upon a matter of pressing moment relating to the Ute Indians, and I trust, if the pending business is postponed, that question will be considered, as it must be considered within the next few days and finally disposed of.

Mr. McPHERSON. I desire to say to the honorable Senator from Iowa that the Senator from Texas, who has charge of that matter, gave notice that he would call it up on Wednesday morning after the morning hour, and therefore I did not suppose I should be interfering at all with the consideration of that. It will only take a short time to dispose of the matter which I wish to bring before the Senate, not over half an hour all told.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no wish to interfere with the Senator from New Jersey. I only desired to express a wish that the matter relating to the Ute Indians may be considered at an early moment and finally disposed of, at least on Wednesday.

Mr. McPHERSON. The Senator from Texas has already asked for Wednesday.

Mr. ALLISON. If that is the understanding, I have no objection. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Geneva award bill is informally laid aside.

DOUBLE-TURRETED MONITORS.

Mr. McPHERSON. I move to take up House resolution No. 237.

Mr. EATON. I desire to say to my friend from New Jersey that I think it likely that resolution will elicit a good deal of discussion, aside from his own remarks.

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not think it will, for the very reason that the committee are unanimous in their report of the resolution. I think there will be no question in the Senate, as the committee are unanimous.

Mr. EATON. I will give way to my friend to make the remarks he desires, but at the conclusion of them I shall ask for an executive session.

Mr. McPHERSON. For the information of my friend from Connecticut I will only say that the Committee on Naval Affairs are entirely unanimous in their report, and will ask the favorable action of the Senate on House resolution No. 237; but as a member of that committee I wish to give my reasons only and will be very brief.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to taking up the measure referred to by the Senator from New Jersey? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 237) directing the Secretary of the Navy to organize a board to inquire into the present condition of the double-turreted monitors and the propriety and cost of completing said vessels.

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand that after the Senator from New Jersey has concluded his remarks there will be an opportunity for a reply to them.

Mr. McPHERSON. I know no reason why there should not be.

Mr. ANTHONY. I understood from the Senator from Connecticut that he would insist on his motion at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from New Jersey. I think there will probably be some reply to the remarks of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EATON. I am very anxious, as my friend from Rhode Island knows, for an executive session. There is some public business that I desire to bring forward. However, let my friend from New Jersey go on, and if gentlemen desire to answer him now I shall not object.

Mr. McPHERSON. I ask, then, for the reading of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to organize a board, to consist of not less than five nor more than seven officers of the United States Navy, selected at his discretion from the active and retired list, none of whom shall be of a lower grade than captain, which board shall be organized immediately after the passage of this resolution, and shall be charged with the duty of thoroughly examining in person the double-turreted monitors, with a view of determining, first, whether it is to the interest of the Government to complete said vessels, to wit, the Puritan, the Monadnock, the Amphitrite, and the Terror; second, if so, whether it is to the interest of the Government to complete them according to the existing plans, models, and agreements; third, if any change is demanded in order to make said vessels more efficient as war vessels, to inquire into the extent and character as well as cost of such modifications, and also inquire into any other fact material to each of these questions; and of all which they will make report to the Secretary of the Navy, who shall at once transmit the same with his opinions thereon to Congress.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, certain memorials were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate asking for an appropriation of money by Congress for the completion (now partially completed) of the four double-turreted monitors, to wit: the Amphitrite, Terror, Puritan, and Monadnock; and the Committee on Naval Affairs, without further explanation, reported back to the Senate a resolution authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to organize a board of survey, to consist of competent naval officers, whose duty it shall be to examine said vessels and determine and report to Congress whether they shall be completed or broken up. The good judgment of the committee, as expressed in the terms of the resolution, have no doubt been already rendered apparent to the Senate by reason of facts disclosed in the investigation of this subject by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, and found in Report No. 787, Forty-fifth Congress, second session; but I cannot justify myself as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate, or satisfy the persistent, oft-renewed demand of the public that our Navy be speedily put in a condition for offensive and defensive operations, by simply reporting from the committee a resolution for further delay, without giving my reasons therefor.

It seems unnecessary for me to say that the people who pay the taxes, even if they cannot regulate the disbursements, have at least the right to know how and to what extent they are squandered.

The records of the Navy Department show that the expenditures for and on account of the Navy, commencing June 30, 1865, down to the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, was $416,785,272.01. This vast amount represents only the money expenditure, to which must be added millions (cost to Government) of accumulated material sold or traded away, which never found its way into the public Treasury.

The naval administration seems to have been a prodigy of wastefulness, ignorance, and indolence; no plan or estimate could be trusted, no law was obeyed, no check was enforced. The vessels which the liberality of Congress had enabled the Government to build, and which had never been out of the harbors, were wantonly destroyed and others built (by favorite contractors) which were not only unfit for sea, but would go down at their moorings. For all this vast expenditure of money, Hon. B. W. HARRIS, (a distinguished republican, and therefore a competent witness,) member of the Naval Committee of the House of Representatives, tells us we have only this to show.

We quote from his report:

The vessels constituting the Navy of the United States in February, 1879, as appears by the last Navy Register, were 142 in number. Of these 67 were steam sea-going vessels of war of all classes; 22 were sea-going sailing-vessels of war of all classes; 24 were iron-clads for coast and harbor defense; 2 were torpedo-vessels, and the remaining 27 were tugs, dispatch-boats, &c.

To know the actual strength of our Navy we must ascertain the present condition and capacity for war purposes of each one of these vessels, and it would be most unwise in the committee and in Congress to allow themselves to be misled as to our naval strength by the number of vessels whose names appear in the Register. Small as the number of our naval vessels is as compared with the other navies of the world, in real fighting power the Navy is infinitely smaller, and it is time Congress and the country should face the fact and provide the remedy.

The committee have made careful investigation into this subject, and have used all the means within their reach to ascertain the present condition of each of these vessels, its character, usefulness, and capacity for war purposes, and now lay their information and conclusions before the House. The information here presented may be unwelcome and humiliating, but national honor and safety alike demand that the plain truth be told, to the end that the people may be able to judge whether Congress has done or is doing its duty in providing adequately for the national defense and for maintaining the honor of the American name.

The steam-vessels of the Navy are divided into four classes, as first rates, second rates, third rates, and fourth rates.

The first-rates are five in number. These were originally fine vessels, and the equals of any of their class in the world; but they must now be classed as obsolete and as practically out of use as vessels of war. We class them as non-combatants. Longer to retain the Niagara (one of the five) on our Naval Register is worse than useless; it is a deception, besides being a waste of public money; and the same may be said of many of the other vessels classed as naval vessels on the Register.

The report further states:

We have, then, of the twenty-seven second-rate steam-vessels:
Fit for sea	9
Under repair	2
Awaiting repair	3
Disabled on account of yellow fever	1
A mere store hulk	1
Worthless and to be sold	7
On the stocks unfinished, worthy of completion	1
Rotten on the stocks and worthless	3
Total	27

THIRD-RATE STEAM-VESSELS.

The Register gives the list of twenty-nine third-rate steam-vessels.

Of these six are laid up in ordinary, worthless for naval purposes, and should be sold or broken up to save the expense of their care.

Six are deemed worthy of repair, and are undergoing repair or laid up awaiting repair.

Two are antiquated paddle-wheel steamers of obsolete type and expensive in use. They have little, if any, value for strictly naval purposes.

The remaining fifteen vessels are all comparatively small cruising vessels, the largest being less than one thousand tons burden. They are, however, good vessels of their class, and probably as good as any of their size. They are not generally of great speed and are not heavily armed. They perform excellent service in time of peace, but would not do us great credit in time of war with any really naval power.

FOURTH-RATE STEAM-VESSELS.

The six vessels of this class borne upon the Register are really of no account as vessels of war.

Such are substantially the facts in relation to our sea-going steam-vessels of war—our Navy proper—for offensive naval warfare.

SAILING-VESSELS.

The Register contains the names of twenty-two sailing-vessels of all classes.

These old worthies of a past age can no longer serve their country in war. Their cost for care and preservation is greater than their usefulness can justify, and their names should disappear from the Navy, some of them to reappear in new vessels worthy of themselves and of their country. Only five of them are now in condition to navigate the ocean.

IRON-CLADS.

The Register gives the names of twenty-four iron-clads belonging to the Navy, only fourteen of which are reported to be in condition for effective service. They are all fourth-rates and carry only two guns each; all smooth-bores of fifteen inch caliber. There is not a single rifled gun on our iron-clad fleet afloat, as we understand it.

The four iron-clad double-turreted monitors, whose merits we are now considering, are on this list and Mr. HARRIS's report in respect of them says:

They have been for a long time under contract and large sums of money have been expended in rebuilding them of iron. The sum estimated for their completion is also very large. They are the following, viz:

Amphitrite, at Wilmington, Delaware, by Harlan & Hollingsworth; Miantonomah, at Chester, Pennsylvania, by John Roach; Monadnock, at Mare Island, California, by Burgess & Co.; Terror, at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, by Cramp & Sons; Puritan, at Chester, Pennsylvania, by John Roach.

Counting 2 torpedo-boats, 27 tugs, and small vessels scarcely worthy of mention in a computation of efficient vessels for naval purposes, we find the whole number of vessels in our Navy to be 142, of which number only 48 are capable of firing a gun, and of these 5 are old obsolete sailing vessels.

Considering that in thirteen years of profound peace, ending June 30, 1877, there has been expended on account of the Navy over four hundred millions of dollars, is it not disagreeable and humiliating to contemplate that to-day the United States Government in respect of efficient naval equipment is practically bankrupt?

It is proper here to say that an outraged and indignant people found no relief from this culmination of vices in the Government until their faithful agents in the House of Representatives ended at once, to use a mild phrase, this era of unparalleled extravagance. In proof of this, we need only say that the democratic House of Representatives for the four fiscal years commencing June 30, 1876, and ending June 30, 1880, appropriated but little over fourteen millions per year, and by an arbitrary rule of law stopped the system of barter so long enjoyed, and required the expenditures to be kept within the limit of appropriations.

In order to show how the liberality of the nation has been made fruitless by the evils in administration, it will only be necessary to follow the history of these four double-turreted iron-clad monitors. The statements we make touching the construction of these vessels is obtained from unimpeachable record testimony, from which quotations are made.

AMPHITRITE.

The only evidence, except receipts for payment, that any formal agreement ever existed for the construction of this vessel is found in the letter of I. Hanscom, Chief of Bureau of Construction and Repair of the Navy Department, dated September 24, 1874, and addressed to the Harlan and Hollingsworth Company, Wilmington, Delaware. It reads thus:

GENTLEMEN: Your proposition to perform all the labor necessary to put in place an iron-clad monitor in accordance with plans and specifications you have submitted to us * * * for the sum of $135,000 is received and accepted.

We find nothing in the records of the Department previous to this acceptance of an alleged proposal explaining how this proposal came to be made, or that any proposal ever was made.

To state it plainly: Your proposition, to do certain undescribed work, at your own price, without soliciting competition as the law prescribes, and in accordance with your own plans and specifications, without first determining whether a vessel built upon such a plan would sink or swim (see Puritan) is received and accepted. This sum represented only the cost of labor—all material to be furnished by the Government.

TERROR.

The original agreements (with Cramp & Son) for putting in frame this iron-clad monitor for the sum of $135,000 (exclusive of material to be furnished by the Government) were substantially the same.

PURITAN.

The original agreements for putting in frame the iron-clad Puritan for the sum of $155,000 * * * were identical in form with those first mentioned. The contractor was to receive a certain sum, but what the Government was to receive was left almost entirely to his discretion. The proposition, in writing, on the part of the contractor to perform certain undescribed or inadequately described work; and the information, in writing, on the part of the Department that said proposal was accepted is all the records of the Navy Department reveal in the nature of a contract touching the construction originally of the Amphitrite, Terror, and Puritan.

In like manner on April 5, 1875, a second agreement with the same contractor was concluded by the Department for additional work on the Amphitrite—all material to be furnished by the Government; and for labor alone the contractor was to receive the sum of $155,000.

In like manner on April 5, 1875, a second agreement with the same contractor was concluded by the Department for additional work on the Terror—all material to be furnished by the Government; and for labor alone the contractor was to receive the sum of $155,000.

In like manner on April 7, 1875, a second agreement with the same contractor was concluded by the Department for additional work on the Puritan—all material to be furnished by the Government; and for the labor alone the contractor was to receive the sum of $207,000.

MONADNOCK.

The initial proceedings (all the records show) for the construction of the Monadnock will be found in the following letter of I. Hanscom, Chief of Bureau of Construction and Repair, Navy Department, dated October 19, 1874:

Monadnock—Thomas F. Rowland, contractor.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR,

October 19, 1874.

SIR: Your proposition of the 24th ultimo to perform all the labor necessary to put in frame "the hull of an iron-clad monitor, in accordance with your drawings and specifications," that is to say, erect the frame, garboard-strakes, keelsons, floors, deck-beams, stanchions, &c., "making the structure complete in all respects, except the riveting, in readiness to receive the internal and external plating; also in readiness for the internal fittings, deck-plating, side armor, &c.; to take down the same and to mark, pack, and ship it to the United States navy-yard, Mare Island, California, for the sum of $135,000," is received.

This proposition is accepted, with the mutual understanding that the work to be performed by you embraces stem and stern posts, the intercostal plates, with all necessary passages for water-courses and ventilation, all ledges and carlings for hatches, deck-pipes, and turrets, for turret-beds and shafts, all work for propeller-shaft connected with the frame of the vessel, and all other work, except the internal and external plating.

To paint with metallic paint or red lead all work requiring the same composing the frame of the vessel, or the repairing the Monadnock, double-turreted monitor. The iron that you will furnish for this work will be the best quality charcoal-iron, and have a tensile strength of sixty thousand pounds per square inch, for which the Government will pay by delivering to you three pounds of old or scrap iron for each pound of new iron used.

The entire work above mentioned to be completed and all the parts shipped as above provided within four months from this date, it being further understood as a part of this agreement that you will send a suitable and skilled person to California to give the proper instructions and superintend the erection of the structure when it arrives there, such person to be paid by you.

Please signify your acceptance of this proposition.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Mr. THOS. F. ROWLAND,

Green Point, New York.

I. HANSCOM,

Chief of Bureau.

No intimation is anywhere given (but the contrary asserted) that proposals were invited for the construction of this vessel. In short, this contractor was authorized in accordance with his own drawings and specifications, carrying into effect, at the Government expense, his own ideas of naval architecture—to construct at his own price a war vessel for the United States Navy. Reference to the agreement will show that it provided for the taking apart, marking, packing, and shipping this vessel to Mare Island navy-yard, California. Upon the arrival of the parts at California the Navy Department invited proposals for certain described work to be performed, and Phineas Burgess being the lowest responsible bidder, the work was given to him under a form of agreement possessing all the attributes of a legal contract, including bonds for the faithful performance on the part of the contractor. This and a subsequent contract made with Phineas Burgess appears to have been the first, last, and only legal contract made by the Navy Department touching the construction of these four monitors.

The contracts with Phineas Burgess bore date severally September 18, 1875, for $22,350, and October 2, 1875, for $216,900 for labor alone—all material to be furnished by the Government.

The claim on the part of the contractors that the terms and conditions of the several contracts before stated touching the construction of these four iron monitors have been fulfilled appears to be verified by the action of the Navy Department in auditing and paying the bills, although certified to by an officer who was not within three thousand miles of the work.

The work having been performed and money paid, it is therefore idle, at this late day, to discuss the forms and methods by which it was accomplished, except to advise the Senate of the utter recklessness and disregard by the Navy Department of all proper safeguards for the protection of the Government in respect of plans and specifications, and want of vigilance of supervision in laying the foundation of ships of war, which when completed would cost the Government many millions of dollars. This fact, so apparent, should of itself be influential, if not absolutely decisive, in causing the Senate to withhold appropriations of money for the completion of these monitors until it can be intelligently ascertained how, if at all, it can be safely and profitably applied.

In this connection the committee beg leave to call attention to the fact that with the exception of the Puritan, of which mention will hereafter be made, not one of these monitors has ever been examined by a competent, or any, board of naval officers in respect of their efficiency when completed.

But there are yet other contracts to be considered. On March 3, 1877, contracts, so called, were made by the Navy Department for work to be done by the bureau for the completion of and fitting, exclusive of machinery, of these four iron-clads, amounting in the aggregate to millions of dollars. Each of these contracts contained a provision that no portion of the money should be paid until appropriated by Congress. As there was no money appropriated by Congress subject by law to be applied to payments for work done under the contracts made subsequent to March 1, 1877, these contracts were suspended by the present Secretary of the Navy on March 16, 1877, and the order of suspension has not been revoked.

The honorable Secretary of the Navy, in his annual report of the 30th of November, 1877, says:

I deemed it best to suspend these contracts, inasmuch as I regarded them as not authorized by law, and to submit to Congress to decide whether they shall be recognized or canceled; and, if these vessels are to be completed, in what manner it shall be done. Finding no present appropriation applicable to the purpose I do not regard the Department as possessing any discretionary power in reference to them, except to see that the interest the Government has in them is properly protected.

PURITAN.

The wisdom of the present honorable Secretary of the Navy in suspending the said contracts of the 3d of March, 1877, is sufficiently demonstrated in the reports of the three several boards of survey upon the Puritan, which may be classed thus:

The board of naval officers, of which Rear-Admiral Mulany was president, consisting of two naval officers, three naval constructors, and three engineers, was convened at Chester on the 12th of June, 1877, by order of the Secretary of the Navy, dated the 7th of June.

1877. The date of their report is August 21, 1877. They made the most searching examination and inquiry into all the requirements of the vessel that could be obtained, and after deducting 37 per cent. from the thickness of the armor plating originally intended, wholly at the expense of the military efficiency of the vessel, it was found the actual weight of the vessel when completed would leave the gunwale half an inch under water. It will thus be seen that the very careful and elaborate calculation on the actual vessel by a competent board shows the Puritan to be a total failure.

The second board for the examination of the Puritan, of which Commodore Stevens was president, consisted of one naval officer, two engineers, and two naval constructors. Their report substantially confirms that of the first board, condemning the vessel, and is mainly directed to showing how the weights might be reduced, but, as we have already stated, wholly at the expense of the military efficiency of the vessel.

The third examination, by order of the Secretary of the Navy, at the request of Hon. W. C. WHITTHORNE, the accomplished chairman of the House Committee on Naval Affairs, was made by John Lenthall, naval constructor, and B. F. Isherwood, chief engineer United States Navy. No one acquainted with the record of these officers can question their ability in their respective stations.

These distinguished officers were instructed to report their professional opinions and judgments upon the following points:

Were such plans and specifications properly drawn, and at proper time, and so as, first, to secure an efficient and complete vessel of war of that class; and, second, so as to guard and protect the interest of the Government; and, third, will said vessel, built according to original plans and specifications, or subsequent changes made therein, prove an efficient one?

They say:

We have the honor to state that after a careful examination of all the documents and evidence available on the subject, in making which we have been afforded every facility by the bureaus of the Navy Department, we respectfully submit the following report:

This highly interesting and instructive report will be found in full in the records of the Navy Department; but in order to complete the chain of evidence we copy their conclusions:

There only remains for us to say, in answer to the questions specifically asked by the honorable chairman of the Naval Committee of the House of Representatives, that our professional opinions and judgments are—

First. Neither plans nor specifications were drawn for the construction of the new Puritan; nor were any measures adopted to ascertain whether, when built, she would sink or swim. The failure or success of a first-class national iron-clad was thus put to the hazard of mere chance.

Second. This vessel, as far as constructed, and if finished as contemplated, is a total failure; nor can any changes now practicable make her efficient—meaning by that term, equality with foreign iron-clads of the same size and type.

Third. No measures were taken to protect the Government interest, either in the cost of building the vessel, or in securing efficiency for her when built. Uninvited proposals were made by the contractor, in the absence of plans, specifications, or any definition of the kind, quantity, or quality of work to be done, to build an undescribed vessel for a stipulated round sum of money; and such proposals were at once accepted without inquiry, competition, or any provisions guarding the interest of the Government. The general statement that the new Puritan was to be like a smaller class of vessels was far from being sufficient to either indicate the details of construction or to measure the quantity of work. Such a statement, in fact, only showed that the two classes of vessels were to be of the same type; and no competent person would have allowed the commencement of a national iron-clad of such dimensions and cost without the study and preparation of every part; nor would any officer of the Government, careful of its interests, have contracted for such a vessel except after a public competition.

The manner in which the new Puritan was built is a flagrant exhibition of gross ignorance and culpable carelessness.

Respectfully submitted by your obedient servants,

JOHN LENTHALL,
Naval Constructor United States Navy.
B. F. ISHERWOOD,
Chief Engineer United States Navy.

The original Puritan, of which nothing is left save the miserable abortion which now bears her name, was designed in 1862 by John Ericsson, who was also the contractor for her construction; was a formidable iron monitor 341 feet in length, 50 feet in breadth, and 22 feet in depth. She had two turrets 24 feet in inside diameter, with a turret-shell 15 inches thick, entirely of iron, and a pilot-house 12 inches thick, also of iron. The side-armor was laminated, and composed of six iron plates each 1 inch thick, re-enforced additionally with iron stringers 4½ inches thick, inserted in an oak backing 27 inches thick. This thickness of armor and backing was maintained from stem to stern. She carried four sixteen-inch guns.

This vessel was received, under an act of Congress, in an unfinished state, and by House of Representatives Executive Document No. 280, of the second session of the Fortieth Congress, it appears there had been paid for her, up to the time of her reception, $1,974,622.93.

On November 29, 1873, Mr. Thomas Rowland, the well-known builder of iron ships, at Brooklyn, proposed to the Navy Department to complete the Puritan, hull, machinery, and all appurtenances, ready in every respect for service, increasing the depth one foot, and substituting iron beams and decks, for the sum of $353,000, receiving in addition the old material left after completion.

On February 3, 1876, the old Puritan was towed to the works of John Roach, at Chester, Pennsylvania, by order of I. Hanscom, chief of bureau, dated January 29, 1876, which directs that the Puritan be turned over to John Roach for the purpose of being rebuilt by him at his yard at Chester, Pennsylvania, "which please have done;" this order was addressed to Captain C. H. Wells, United States Navy, commandant navy-yard, League Island.

Strange as it may seem, in March following, Mr. Roach, although we can find no order on the records authorizing it, began to break up the vessel, and his bill for that labor is dated September 2, 1876, and amounts to $6,000, being for cutting up one thousand tons of iron at $6 per ton, or six hundred and sixty tons less than the weight put in the vessel in the hull and side armor alone.

Additional light is thrown upon this question by the following order of I. Hanscom, chief of bureau, dated February 5, 1876, to Edward Hartt, naval constructor, and the report of Constructors Hartt, Fernald, and Hoover, to said Hanscom, dated February 14, 1876, to which is added a summary by Lenthall and Isherwood:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR,
February 5, 1876.

SIR: A board consisting of yourself as senior officer, and Naval Constructor Frank L. Fernald and Assistant Naval Constructor John B. Hoover, is hereby appointed to examine the hull of the iron-clad steamer Puritan, and ascertain the merits of that vessel, and recommend what, in the opinion of the board, should be done to insure her the necessary displacement to carry four fifteen-inch guns, or their equal in turrets, and have a protection in armor-plating equal to fourteen inches of solid iron. Draught of water to be not over seventeen feet, with thirty-six-inch freeboard; and to have steam power sufficient to propel her twelve knots for at least twelve consecutive hours, and carry coal for six days' full steaming; forty-two hundred and six tons being the present displacement, the board will estimate the cost, in addition to the materials which may arise from the hull if broken up, to complete the vessel for sea.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
Naval Constructor EDWARD HARTT, U. S. N.,
Bingham House, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

I. HANSCOM,
Chief of Bureau.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 14, 1876.

SIR: In obedience to your order on the 5th instant, we have examined the hull of the iron-clad Puritan, and submit the following report:

We find the iron portion of the hull nearly completed; side armor on; all of the main-deck and a portion of the berth-deck laid, (both of which are very badly decayed); boilers in, and, as far as we are enabled to judge, about two-thirds of the weight of the engines on board; also several of the blowers and blower-engines and part of the turret-gear. Her draught of water in this condition is ten feet forward and eighteen feet ten inches aft, with a displacement to this draught of about twenty-nine hundred and sixty tons.

We estimate the weight yet to go on board to complete her for sea according to present plan, at about nineteen hundred tons, including stores, making a total displacement of forty-eight hundred and sixty tons, which will require a mean draught of twenty feet eight inches, or thereabout, leaving a freeboard of only sixteen inches, with a surplus displacement of about four hundred and sixty tons. It is therefore impossible to increase the thickness of side armor to fourteen inches, and to add another turret with two fifteen-inch guns, with ammunition for the same, and to provide room for the necessary number of men to work the extra guns, and also storage for additional provisions, stores, &c., corresponding thereto, without making very extensive changes in the original design and construction of the present hull at a very large expense.

The extreme length of the Puritan, (three hundred and thirty-two feet,) together with her heavy draught of water, small armament, and limited defensive power, preclude the possibility of her being, if even completed as originally designed, an efficient vessel for harbor defense or for other war purposes; and it is unreasonable to suppose that, if the necessary alterations were made in order to enable her to carry the additional weights, she would draw less water, have more speed, or be handier in her movements.

We are therefore constrained to believe that it is inexpedient to expend any more money upon this vessel, but that it is for the best interest of the Government to rebuild her, and to use such portion of the old material as may be found suitable.

It is our opinion that the dimensions of a vessel, to meet the requirements contained in your letter, should be about two hundred and eighty feet long, sixty feet wide, and twenty feet deep from top of main-deck plating (at side) to base-line, and to have a displacement of at least six thousand tons, to a draught of eighteen feet, and to be similar in design to the Terror and class, now rebuilding, but of increased structural strength, in order to carry heavier armor.

We estimate the cost of such a vessel, exclusive of the material in the present hull as it lies, and also exclusive of the armament and stores of all kinds, but otherwise ready for sea, at $1,395,000.

We are, respectfully, your obedient servants,

EDWARD HARTT,
Naval Constructor.
F. L. FERNALD,
Naval Constructor.
JOHN B. HOOVER,
Assistant Naval Constructor.

Naval Constructor ISALAH HANSCOM,
Chief of Bureau Construction and Repair, Washington, D. C.

From the foregoing order of Mr. Hanscom, dated the 5th of February, 1876, to a board of naval constructors, it appears that not until about fourteen months after the agreement to build the new Puritan were measures taken to ascertain whether the old unfinished Puritan could be completed with solid side-armor fourteen inches thick and steam machinery sufficient to propel her at twelve knots per hour for at least twelve consecutive hours, carrying coal for six days' full steaming, and mounting four fifteen-inch guns in two turrets. Mr. Hanscom, it will be observed, required in this vessel a thickness of fourteen inches for the side-armor, while the much larger vessel he was then building by her side, to supersede her, was to have only twelve inches thickness of side armor.

In the foregoing report of the board of naval constructors, dated February 14, 1876, made in response to Mr. Hanscom's order of February 5, 1876, it is stated that the old Puritan, completed as originally intended, would have a freeboard of sixteen inches, but could not carry the additional weights proposed by Mr. Hanscom; the board therefore condemned her, and recommended the building of a new vessel that would meet the requirements in the above order of Mr. Hanscom. By a singular coincidence this board recommends for the new vessel then before them the identical length, breadth, depth, and displacement to a specified draught of water of the new Puritan, for which Mr. Hanscom had made a contract about fourteen months previous, and whose construction had so far progressed that large bills had been presented and paid for labor alone.

The length, two hundred and eighty feet, which the board suggests for the new Puritan, is twenty feet more than that proposed by Mr. Roach, in his original offer of December 3, 1874, and is precisely the length of the new vessel then actually in process of construction. And more singular still, this board recommends a depth of vessel exactly the same as that to which the new Puritan had been increased, long after her building had commenced and previous to this time, just as though the suggestions had been furnished to the board for this occasion. Such coincidences cannot be accidental, and must have been designed to meet special purposes, which seem to be the endorsement of the new vessel, with its covert alterations, and the condemnation of the old one.

Touching the requirements of Mr. Hanscom in his letter of instructions dated February 5, 1875, the board, in their reply, say: "It is unreasonable to suppose that if the necessary alterations were made, in order to enable her to carry the additional weights, she would draw less water, have more speed, or be handier in her movements." To this the board might have added, they were absurd.

The above stinging criticism on the methods employed without color of law, to condemn the old and contract for the new Puritan, is taken bodily from the most excellent report of Messrs. Lenthall & Sherwood.

The work, ordered by the Department, and contracted for, to be performed by John Roach, as per letter of I. Hanscom, Chief of Bureau, dated April 7, 1875, marked explicit, addressed to John Roach, esq., Chester, Pennsylvania, and the answer to this letter by John Roach, dated April 10, 1875, is treated as repairs (Hon. B. W. HARRIS'S report also calls it repairs) to the double-turreted monitor Puritan, meaning, of course, the old Puritan. Except to continue longer the deception, and in inference to that kind of fear which always brings murder out, we can scarcely conceive the propriety of such a course. Acting, however, according to the letter of record testimony, we call it repairs, although the new Puritan was commenced at the keel, and contains only such portions of the old vessel as have been generously bestowed on the Government, and proceed upon the light given to compute the cost of the present Puritan to the Government, if completed, under all of Mr. Roach's agreements.

Original cost of Puritan, under repairs, $1,974,622.01; repairs settled for to date, with John Roach, $491,030; cost of completion under Roach contracts of March 3, 1877, $1,621,342; making a total cost of $4,086,994.01 for a vessel which three competent boards of naval officers tell us, if completed in accordance with original plans and specifications, will not float.

The committee recommend that no money be appropriated by Congress for the completion of these monitors under contracts now made or to be made, until the efficiency of said vessels, when completed, shall have been ascertained by a competent board of naval officers appointed by the Secretary of the Navy for that purpose and the report thereon submitted to Congress.

To carry into effect this recommendation the committee ask the concurrence of the Senate in the following House resolution:

Joint resolution directing the Secretary of the Navy to organize a board to inquire into the present condition of the double-turreted monitors, and the propriety and cost of completing said vessels.

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to organize a board, to consist of not less than five nor more than seven officers of the United States Navy, selected at his discretion from the active and retired list, which board shall be organized immediately after the passage of this resolution, and shall be charged with the duty of thoroughly examining in person the double-turreted monitors, with a view of determining, first, whether it is to the interest of the Government to complete said vessels, to wit, the Puritan, the Monadnock, the Amphitrite, and the Terror; second, if so, whether it is to the interest of the Government to complete them according to the existing plans, models, and agreements; third, if any change is demanded in order to make said vessels more efficient as war-vessels, to inquire into the extent and character as well as cost of such modifications, and also inquire into any other fact material to each of these questions; and of all which they will make report to the Secretary of the Navy, who shall at once transmit the same with his opinions thereon to Congress.

Mr. BLAINE. I am very sure, Mr. President, that the Senate does not desire that the long-time controversy over the administration of the Navy Department shall be fought again here. I do not rise to traverse the various statements made by the honorable chairman of the Naval Committee; only I desire to say that the committee of which he is the head did not in any wise agree with him in the presentation of facts which he has just made. They would not, as a committee, agree to make that statement to the Senate; they would not agree to stand upon it before the country.

I do not doubt the honorable Senator from New Jersey states conscientiously what his own views are; I state as conscientiously that I differ from him in the detail of facts; I differ from him in their application. We agree, however, upon the necessity of the passage of the joint resolution, because the main object to be attained is in some way to utilize the vast expenditure that has already been made upon these iron-clads. Upon that we can agree; upon that the committee are unanimous. When it comes to a statement of facts the honorable Senator makes it upon his individual responsibility and not as the organ of the Naval Committee.

With that statement I am willing to let the matter rest and have the joint resolution passed.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I wish to say in answer to the statement of the honorable Senator from Maine that I do not present my views as the report of the committee. On the contrary, the report of the committee had been made some days since. The action of the committee was simply to report back the joint resolution without any further explanation.

The honorable Senator will remember that we had referred to us as a committee certain petitions of the State of California praying for the completion of the iron-clad monitor Monadnock; we had the petitions of certain contractors praying for an appropriation of money for the completion of others of these iron-clad vessels, or at least for some disposition by Congress of the vessels, that they might not be encumbered with them in their ship-yards. As a member of that committee I cannot consent to come into the Senate and report back a joint resolution for a longer delay in answer to petitions praying for an appropriation without some kind of explanation. The honorable Senator will not fail to remember that the joint resolution now before the Senate, which I in common with other members of the committee have asked the Senate to adopt, provides for a delay until a board of competent naval officers may be organized by the Secretary of the Navy—for what purpose? For the purpose of determining whether these four vessels, of which the resolution speaks, are to be completed or not; whether they have been properly commenced; whether the plans and specifications have been drawn by any naval officer who was competent to draw them, or whether the Government had been sufficiently advised as to the propriety of their completion. I submit that I, for one, cannot return them a resolution delaying longer an appropriation, as an answer to their payer, without giving some reason.

I have taken up the case of the Puritan and I have shown the report of three boards of survey, one called the Mulany, one the Stevens board, and, finally and last, a board consisting of two, I suppose, of the most competent naval officers in this or any other country in their respective stations; I speak of John Lenthall and B. F. Isherwood. These officers declare that one of the four vessels, the only one upon which there has ever been a board of survey, is a total and absolute failure. For one I cannot consent to the completion of three other vessels commenced in the same manner—commenced upon the proposition of some contractor upon plans and specifications furnished by himself, as the records show. The Senator will understand me; I say as the records show. I submit that it would not be prudent on the part of the Senate or on the part of Congress to make an appropriation of money for the completion of three vessels until we know whether those vessels when completed would sink or swim.

Mr. FARLEY. I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey a question. The object of the joint resolution, I understand, is for the purpose of ascertaining the fact whether these vessels will be seaworthy or whether they are worth completing. I understand that there is no opposition to the passage of the resolution, and the very object of the Senator would be accomplished if the commission were appointed. I do not understand the Senator from Maine is opposing the resolution.

Mr. BLAINE. Of course the honorable Senator from California knows that the Naval Committee is unanimous in favor of the joint resolution. In so far as the chairman of the committee was debating any point, it was not a point at all relative to the passage of the resolution. It was a point, as I have already said, which really emptied upon the Senate floor all the controversies of the last six years about the naval administration.

Mr. FARLEY. I understand the point.

Mr. BLAINE. And I object to it; it will do no good. I desire furthermore to say, with the utmost respect for the naval officers both of the engineer corps and the corps of construction, that I do not believe it is a possible thing to construct in a private ship-yard any vessel that they will not criticize and from a sort of professional zeal attempt to depreciate. Therefore, when the honorable Senator brings up the judgment of Mr. Lenthall and of Mr. Isherwood I am willing to concede their professional eminence, but at the same time I am frank to say that I do not believe they would be impartial judges about the construction of a naval vessel built in any other way than by the regular red-tape requirement.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Were the naval board an impartial board?

Mr. BLAINE. The honorable Senator is asking me to go into a lot of matter which does not pertain to this resolution at all.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Ah, but the Senator criticised my remarks. The honorable Senator says that the Committee on Naval Affairs do not agree with the chairman of the committee in this report. I claim that it is not a report, that it is not simply an expression of opinion upon my part, but based upon facts taken from the record.

Mr. BLAINE. I was not disputing at all the right of the honorable Senator to present his views.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I wish now to answer the honorable Senator from California. He asks me if the Naval Committee are not agreed upon the joint resolution. I say most assuredly we are agreed so far as the terms of the resolution are concerned, but for one I cannot consent to accept from his State, the State of California, a memorial praying for an immediate appropriation of money by Congress for the completion of the Monadnock, and then send back to the people of the State of California a resolution which, instead of appropriating money for the purpose, provides for a further delay; and perhaps, I say quite possibly and even probably, we shall not get a report from this board in time to make an appropriation of money during this session.

Therefore I ask the honorable Senator from California if he is ready and willing as one member of the Naval Committee and in answer to a memorial from his own State to throw back to his State simply a resolution providing for a further delay without giving the facts upon which that delay is based?

Mr. FARLEY. I have no objection to the Senator from New Jersey stating his reasons for the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I have done so.

Mr. FARLEY. And I see no objection now to the passage of the resolution by any Senator. It was understood in the committee, and I do not think there is any question about it, that this resolution would bring about an investigation of these vessels for which an appropriation is sought.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Has it not already been done?

Mr. FARLEY. Then what objection has the Senator got to the passage of the joint resolution?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I do not object to the passage of the resolution.

Mr. FARLEY. Then let us vote on it.

Mr. MCPHERSON. If the honorable Senator from Maine would sit down we would have a vote in five minutes, but if he undertakes to criticize a speech I make here, based on facts, I shall have to take the floor as long as he does.

Mr. BLAINE. The honorable Senator from New Jersey is exactly in the attitude in which the expected heir found his uncle. The old gentleman had his own way, but he did not exactly have his own way in having it. The honorable Senator gets his own way with the resolution, but he is not exactly satisfied in the way he gets his way. He would like the Naval Committee to submit a large amount of argument, which does not have the slightest effect in the world in expediting the process of the resolution. He would like a long discussion upon that which has not any virtue in it whatever, and which is only raking over the embers of a fire that is burnt out and which, if the honorable Senator will permit me to say, has not got a blaze in it, nor so much as smoke.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I do not understand that I am resurrecting an old matter that has been entirely burnt out. So far as I am concerned, as a member of the Senate or as a member of the Naval Committee of the Senate, I have never had this subject-matter referred to me before, and most assuredly it has never come to the notice of that committee before. But when the Senate of the United States refer to a committee of its own body certain material upon which it desires a report, and the committee, in answer to memorials also that were referred to it asking for an appropriation of money, report back a resolution of delay, then I cannot for one consent to go before the country or to come into the presence of the Senate without giving my reasons why I vote for the resolution and voted to report it to the Senate. I have no disposition to bring matters that have been long ago burnt out before the attention of the Senate; but I do most unqualifiedly object to saying to the people of the State of California, to the one hundred and one people who have sent their memorials here, to the persistent call and demand of the public for the completion of these monitors—I do most certainly object to answering that appeal by merely voting for a resolution of delay; and that is what the honorable Senator from Maine is disposed to do. It is about the only subject that comes before the Senate in which he can interpose a speech by which the public shall be informed that he does not avail himself of the opportunity; but this does not appear to be upon his side of the question.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, I am not prepared specifically to refute the allegations made by my friend from New Jersey, but my recollection of the circumstances under which these vessels were ordered is sufficiently vivid to make me confident that all such as are unfavorable to the late administration can be contradicted, explained, or disproved. It is sufficient that the constructors, some of them certainly, are quite ready to complete the ships on the contracts and specifications and conditions, and if the vessels do not fulfill these conditions they will forfeit their compensation and their bonds. In reply to the complaint that the vessels were contracted for on the specifications of the contractors, I say of course they were, those specifications being approved by the Department. The contractors were the most accomplished naval constructors in the country; they were required to furnish vessels of a certain capacity, power, armament, and speed. Of course no contractors, no mechanics would undertake this except on specifications that they approved. There were but few establishments that were capable of undertaking these structures. One was given to each that had the means of completing the work. They entered into the contract, and they are ready, or some of them are—I do not know but some of them may have been bankrupted by the failure of the Government to fulfill its stipulations—some of them are ready to fulfill them, and to render the vessels to the Government, and if they do not float, if they do not sail, if they do not fight, then they forfeit their contract.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs, in line 6 of the joint resolution to strike out the words "none of whom shall be of a lower grade than captain."

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to have some reason given why the amendment should be proposed. It seems to me that if one-third of what the Senator from New Jersey says be true, these officers who are to make this investigation ought to be at least of the rank of captain.

Mr. MCPHERSON. It was deemed necessary to strike out from the joint resolution those words, so that if there were not a sufficient number of naval officers of the grade of captain, those of a lower grade may be competent to serve.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey one or two questions. How long has it been since there was work done on these vessels?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I think there has been no work done on them since the 4th and the 16th of March, 1877. The contracts of the 3d of March, 1877, were suspended by the Secretary of the Navy on the 16th of March, 1877, and the order of suspension has not been revoked. Therefore there has been no work done upon them. The joint resolution provides simply a board of survey to determine whether the other three vessels are like or unlike the Puritan, which has been already decided to be a total failure by three competent boards. It is also intended to ascertain whether there can be any changes made in the Puritan that might make her an efficient war vessel and one that it will be for the interest of the Government to complete. In other words, it is to be a board of survey to take into consideration all the facts, the present condition of the vessel, the actual vessel, and by certain plans and estimates to see whether they can be finished to make them efficient war vessels. We think the joint resolution covers the whole ground.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the joint resolution be read at length the third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time at length.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is: Shall the joint resolution pass?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask whether this inquiry is not within the competence of the executive department of the United States without a law for it. The thing that strikes me as open to question is the tendency that the joint resolution implies on the part of Congress to go into the detail of administrative government, which I do not think our organization is the best one possible for. I know it is getting to be a pretty strong habit, but for one I wish to be considered as on the other side of that thing except in some extreme emergency.

As I understand the law the executive department of the United States has complete authority to do everything that the joint resolution directs to be done. It is true that the joint resolution itself commands this to be done, but it commands the performance of a merely executive inquiry which seems to imply that the persons in charge of the executive department of the Government of the United States in this particular branch of the public service are either incapable of understanding what it is fit to do and we must require them to do it, or that they are unwilling to do what is fit to be done, knowing that it ought to be done, and we then compel them to do it by something in the nature of an edict.

I know that this joint resolution is not singular; we are running into this habit all the time; but for one, unless it is made to appear that there is an extreme public emergency and that the Secretary of the Navy and the President of the United States, neglectful of their duties, will not do what ought to be done in an administrative way about this administrative question, and therefore we are called upon to act, I should not wish to be a party to this method of legislation, of Congress continually assuming to go into administrative questions instead of holding public officers to a general and strict account in respect of the way in which they perform or agree to perform their public duties.

The joint resolution was passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WHYTE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 29, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. A. W. PITZER, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of Saturday last was read.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Mr. Speaker, I find upon examination of the RECORD of the proceedings of Saturday that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON] entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill No. 885, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses," approved March 3, 1879, was recommitted to the Select Committee on the Census and ordered to be printed; and the Speaker made the announcement that the motion to reconsider would be entered on the Journal. I would like to inquire whether the motion to reconsider was so entered?

The SPEAKER. The Chair was mistaken. Under the new rules the Chair finds that the motion was not admissible. Under the old rules it was, hence the recognition. The Chair thinks the bill should be considered by the House at an early day.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. But the motion to reconsider was not in order.

The SPEAKER. It was not admissible; but the Chair thinks that the House owes it to the importance of the subject to give it an early consideration, and will recognize at any time any gentleman representing the Census Committee who desires to bring the bill up.

Mr. COX. Before this matter is disposed of—

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests to the gentleman in charge of the bill that after the call of States is concluded, he had better ask the House to fix an early day for the consideration of that bill.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to call attention to the Journal. On page 11 of yesterday's RECORD I find that the House passed on Saturday a joint resolution granting leave to Robert L. Martin to withdraw from the files—

Mr. COX. Before we pass from the census bill, I would like my colleague on the committee [Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky] to have a hearing.

The SPEAKER. That matter has passed from consideration. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] desires to correct the Journal, as the Chair understands.

Mr. CONGER. I find that a joint resolution for the relief of Robert L. Martin was on Saturday last introduced by unanimous consent, read three times, and passed. As appears by the report in the RECORD, it "grants leave to Robert L. Martin to withdraw from the files of the House papers and proofs filed by him before the southern claims commission in support of his disallowed claims." The existing law forbids the withdrawal of papers of this kind. When the resolution was acted on I supposed it provided for a simple withdrawal of papers before a committee of the House, under the usual rule. But the resolution goes further and allows the withdrawal of proofs which have been before a court of the United States, and which by law should remain as a part of the records. Of course no one here thought about it. I do not know in what way to reach the matter; but I will give notice of a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had better do that after the call of States to-day.

Mr. CONGER. I merely call the attention of the Speaker to the matter so that we may see what is the proper way to reach such a case.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman to enter the motion immediately after the call of States.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to state that the motion to reconsider was made and laid on the table.

Mr. CONGER. I understand not.

Mr. HUNTON. It was made. I do not know whether it was entered or not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised by the journal clerk that the motion to reconsider was not entered; and the Chair is informed that it does not appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. HUNTON. Well, then, the record was omitted by accident; the motion was certainly made.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to give notice of the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman after the call of States to-day.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday evening I made a motion to reconsider the recommitment of the bill in regard to the census. No objection was made by anybody to entering that motion; and it was entered under what seems to have been unanimous consent of the House. Certainly the motion could be entered by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not ask unanimous consent, but allowed the gentleman to enter the motion to reconsider as though it was a right belonging to him. On examination this morning, the Chair finds that the motion was not admissible. He will, however, co-operate with the gentleman in any way to bring the bill before the House as early as possible.

Mr. COX. There is no doubt, under the second clause of Rule XVIII, that we cannot make this motion to reconsider. All that we can do is to ask the House at the conclusion of the call of States to-day to take up this census question and dispose of it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there will be no difficulty about that.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island, rose.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman from Rhode Island object?

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I do.

The SPEAKER. If there be no further correction the Journal will stand approved. The Chair hears none. This being Monday, the first business in order is the call of States and Territories—

Mr. CONGER. Before that business begins, as the motion to reconsider is privileged, I desire to enter that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman after the call of States shall have been completed. The practice has been to let nothing interfere with the call of States on Monday except a correction of the Journal, and the Chair thinks the practice had better be kept up.

REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

Mr. MCGOWAN. Before going to the morning hour, I ask by unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to submit a report at this time. I have the misfortune to sit on the rear row of seats; and, although I was in my seat during the call of committees, I did not hear my committee when it was called, and I now ask to submit a report from that committee.

The SPEAKER. Under the practice the Chair cannot submit requests for unanimous consent before the call of States for bills and resolutions.

Mr. MCGOWAN. I will ask for unanimous consent after the morning hour, then.

BILLS, ETC., FOR REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the first business in order is the call of States and Territories, commencing with the State of Alabama, for the introduction on leave of bills and joint resolutions for reference to their appropriate committees not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider. Under this call joint resolutions and memorials and resolutions of State and territorial Legislatures are in order, and also resolutions calling for executive information, for reference to appropriate committees.

STATES REPUBLICAN IN FORM.

Mr. HERBERT. I introduce, Mr. Speaker, by request, not having had time to consider it fully, joint resolution (H. R. No. 256) providing and defining the manner of guaranteeing to each State a republican form of government.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES A. CROWNOVER AND OTHERS.

Mr. CRAVENS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5402) for the relief of James A. Crownover, John Crownover, Frank M. White, George S. Geiger, and John Ivey, late soldiers of Company F, Third Arkansas Cavalry Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF JOHN A. BUCHANAN.

Mr. CRAVENS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5403) for the relief of the legal representatives of John A. Buchanan, late a private of Company F, Third Arkansas Cavalry Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

H. C. WILLSON.

Mr. BERRY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5404) to pay the claim of H. C. Willson, of Tehama County, California; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

HOMESTEAD SETTLEMENT.

Mr. BERRY (by request) also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5405) to prevent obstructions to pre-emption and homestead settlement of the public lands; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

LIEUTENANT FREDERICK A. RICH.

Mr. PHELPS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5406) granting a pension to Lieutenant Frederick A. Rich, Company B, Twenty-first Regiment Connecticut Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN SCOTT.

Mr. PHELPS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5407) granting an increase of pension to John Scott, of Portland, in the State of Connecticut, late a private in Company K, Twentieth Regiment of Connecticut Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

SYLVESTER ROOT.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5408) granting a pension to Sylvester Root, Company E, Twenty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ACCOUNTS OF LATE REAR-ADMIRAL A. H. FOOTE.

Mr. HAWLEY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5409) for the relief of the late Rear-Admiral A. H. Foote, United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. HAWLEY also submitted the following amendment to the rules; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

No bill or joint resolution shall embrace more than one subject, and matters directly and properly connected therewith, which subject shall be expressed in the title thereof, and a bill proposing to repeal or amend a section or sections of the Revised Statutes shall recite the number of such section or sections, and also the language of said section or sections if so amended.

UNLOADING OF GUANO-VESSLS.

Mr. WAIT introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 257) relating to the unloading of vessels with cargoes of guano from foreign ports and places; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WAIT. I move that joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONGER. I think it relates to revenue, and should go to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. WAIT. The gentleman is mistaken in regard to its having anything at all to do with the revenue.

Mr. CONGER. It changes revenue laws, although the matter referred to is not dutiable.

Mr. WAIT. If the gentleman from Michigan will only reflect for a moment he will see that the proper committee to which this should be referred is the one indicated by me, the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONGER. This provides for going from a port of entry to another place, and that is a change of the revenue laws. There is no duty involved, it is true, but what comes in free under the revenue laws is as much a matter of revenue law as what is dutiable. But if the gentleman from Connecticut has any particular choice in the reference of this joint resolution, I will not object.

Mr. WAIT. Mr. Speaker, guano is brought into this country in both American and foreign bottoms. It comes into the country free from duty. It is prepared in mills scattered along our coast as a fertilizer, and is used as a fertilizer very extensively in this country, especially in those States where cotton is grown. The manufacture of this article produces an offensive odor that compels the manufacturers to resort to islands on the coast, so that the residents of towns and cities will not be annoyed with the offensive smells. This bill should be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and not, as my friend from Michigan urges, to the Committee on Ways and Means. No duty is collected, and this resolution does not in reality change any revenue laws.

Mr. CONGER. The object of the joint resolution may be all right, but I have only suggested that, as it changes revenue laws, its reference should be to the Committee on Ways and Means, and not to the Committee on Commerce; but I do not insist upon it.

Mr. WAIT. I prefer it should go to the Committee on Commerce. The joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MILITARY AND AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, GEORGIA.

Mr. BLOUNT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5410) to authorize the Secretary of War to deliver to the governor of the State of Georgia, as a loan, one hundred and fifty stand of light breech-loading rifles, with accouterments therefor, for the use of the Middle Georgia Military and Agricultural College, at Milledgeville, Georgia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ATLANTA AND MACON, GEORGIA, PORTS OF DELIVERY.

Mr. BLOUNT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5411) to designate the cities of Atlanta and Macon, Georgia, as ports of delivery; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE A. WILSON.

Mr. BOYD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5412) for the relief of George A. Wilson, of Peoria, Illinois; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BOYD. I ask the reference of that bill to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CONGER. This is one of a class of cases which is always referred to the Committee on War Claims—cases arising under a war in which the United States has been engaged.

Mr. BOYD. This bill, in the last Congress, was introduced and referred to the Committee on War Claims, and they reported it back with the recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I hope there will be no objection to that reference in this case.

The SPEAKER. The rule clearly defines the reference in this case. Rule XI provides "that claims arising from any war in which the United States has been engaged shall be referred to the Committee on War Claims," which would seem to be the appropriate reference in this case.

Mr. MCCOOK. I will simply call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that there is now pending before the Committee on Military Affairs a bill in reference to extending the provision of the law which has about expired, covering all cases of the class to which this bill refers.

Mr. BOYD. If it be the appropriate reference I shall not object of course, although I would prefer it should go to the Committee on Military Affairs for the reason stated.

The bill was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ALBERT A. NORTH.

Mr. BOYD also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5413) for the relief of Albert A. North; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

OZIAS HART.

Mr. BARBER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5414) for the relief of Ozias Hart, a soldier of the war of 1812; which was read a first and second time, with the accompanying papers referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

LIABILITY OF STEAMERS, ETC., FOR CERTAIN DEBTS.

Mr. BARBER (by request) also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5415) to make ships, steamers, tug-boats, schooners, and vessels engaged in commerce and navigation between ports of different States, and also between ports of the United States and foreign ports, liable for certain debts contracted by their owners, part owners, masters, clerk, steward, or other agent, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

R. M. YONTZ.

Mr. COLERICK introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5416) granting a pension to R. M. Yontz, late a private in Company I, One hundred and twenty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM T. PATE & CO.

Mr. NEW introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5417) for the relief of William T. Pate & Co.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

MODIFICATION OF PATENT LAWS.

Mr. PRICE presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, asking for a modification of patent laws, so as to exempt from penalty all persons except manufacturers and vendors; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

LIMITING DEBATE IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

Mr. PRICE also submitted the following:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this House the fifth paragraph of Rule XXIII clearly forbids the continuation of debate on any bill in Committee of the Whole House after general debate has been closed by order of the House, except the five minutes on each side of the legitimate and bona fide amendments, and that pro-forma amendments are in violation of said rule, and should not be entertained by the Chair; and the Committee on Rules be, and it is hereby, directed to so amend said Rule XXIII as to accomplish the object of this resolution.

Mr. PRICE. I ask its reference to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CONGER. That seems to be accompanied with instructions to the committee.

Mr. PRICE. It simply relates to the construction of the rule in question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair views this as in the nature of a proposition to amend the rule, accompanied, however, with instructions to the committee.

Mr. PRICE. The object is to get a report from the committee on the subject-matter of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. It is not, however, in the usual form to attain that end. This is in the nature of instructions, not from the House but from an individual member, to the Committee on Rules, and is not in order if objection is made, except for reference.

Mr. PRICE. But if the House adopts the resolution it would then be an instruction to the committee, and its adoption would greatly facilitate the business of the House. I don't think anybody will object to it.

Mr. CONGER. I feel impelled to object to the resolution in its present form.

Mr. PRICE. If my friend from Michigan objects I shall lose all confidence in our ability to get through the business of this session in any reasonable time.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the resolution can only be before the House for reference.

SOLDIERS' MONUMENT AT M'GREGOR, IOWA.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 258) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to the authorities of the city of McGregor, Clayton County, Iowa, four abandoned cannon and carriages for the soldiers' monument in said city; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PEORIAS AND MIAMIES IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. HASKELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5418) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to the united Peorias and Miamies of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES C. RUDD.

Mr. MCKENZIE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5419) for the benefit of James C. Rudd, of Owensborough, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MCKENZIE. This bill provides for an appropriation of money for the rent of a post-office building. I do not know whether it should go to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads or to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. It will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ROBERT RAY.

Mr. CALDWELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5420) granting a pension to Robert Ray, of Hawesville, Hancock County, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF MISSISSIPPI LEVEES.

Mr. ROBERTSON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5421) to provide for the raising, strengthening, and rebuilding of the levees on the Mississippi River, to protect said banks from caving, to permanently locate and deepen the channel of said river, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River, and ordered to be printed.

MONROE DOCTRINE.

Mr. ROBERTSON also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 259) reaffirming and applying the Monroe doctrine; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. CONGER. Let that be referred to the Committee on the Inter-oceanic Canal.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. To what committee does the gentleman from Louisiana desire to have the joint resolution referred?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I leave it to the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it should go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. KING. I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Inter-oceanic Ship-Canal.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution was referred to the Select Committee on the Inter-oceanic Ship-Canal, and ordered to be printed.

HORACE BROWN.

Mr. LADD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5422) granting a pension to Horace Brown, Second Maine Battery; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

EXTRA WAGES TO SEAMEN.

Mr. REED introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5423) amending section 4582, relating to extra wages to seamen upon their discharge by mutual consent in foreign ports; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

FREEMAN N. HALL.

Mr. MURCH introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5424) granting a pension to Freeman N. Hall; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CUSTOMS REVENUE.

Mr. McLANE submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to report to the House of Representatives the rate of duty upon the importations into the United States for the last five years which would, in his judgment, upon each article so imported, have yielded the maximum amount to the Treasury; and the said rate of duty so ascertained shall be expressed as an ad valorem per cent. duty, with the corresponding specific duty.

FREDERICK JOHNSON.

Mr. HENKLE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5425) granting a pension to Frederick Johnson, minor child of Frederick Johnson, late a soldier in the One hundred and forty-sixth Regiment of New York Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGET DAVIS.

Mr. HENKLE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5426) granting a pension to Bridget Davis, widow of John Davis, late a private in Company K, of the Eighth Regiment of Maryland Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DRAWBACKS.

Mr. MORSE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5427) to amend the law relating to drawbacks; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM R. BOAG.

Mr. FIELD (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5428) for the relief of William R. Boag, of Boston, Massachusetts; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MAILS BETWEEN SAINT LOUIS AND EAST SAINT LOUIS.

Mr. STONE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5429) to authorize the Postmaster-General to make a contract with the Saint Louis Bridge Company and Tunnel Railroad to carry the mails between East Saint Louis, Illinois, and the union depot at Saint Louis, Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

POSTAL SERVICE.

Mr. STONE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5430) to amend section 3949 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to the postal service; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

HOMESTEAD SETTLERS IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. NEWBERRY presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, relative to the due protection of settlers under the homestead laws of the United States in certain counties in the State of Michigan; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

TREE CULTURE.

Mr. DUNNELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5431) to amend the tree-culture law so as to require claimants thereunder to make proof of their compliance with legal conditions from time to time; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE D. MOORE.

Mr. MANNING introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5432) authorizing the transfer of the claim of the heirs at law of George D. Moore, deceased, from the Treasury Department to the Court of Claims, with power to said court to hear and determine the said claim de novo; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MANNING. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONGER. Is not that a war claim? I ask that the bill be read. The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas the heirs at law of the late George Dudley Moore, of Noxubee County, in the State of Mississippi, claim to be entitled to receive from the Government of the United States $—, the proceeds of the sale of one hundred and twelve bales of cotton seized by one Harrison Johnston as the assistant special agent of the Treasury Department of the United States, in the said county of Noxubee, on or about the 15th day of August, 1865, as cotton belonging to the United States, which said cotton was sold by and the proceeds paid into the Treasury Department; and

Whereas the said George Dudley Moore in his life-time filed his claim in the Treasury Department under the fifth section of the deficiency appropriation bill

"for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1872, and for former years, and for other purposes," approved May 18, 1872, which said claim was pending and undetermined at the date of said Moore's death; and

Whereas the heirs at law of said Moore—no administration having ever been taken out on said Moore's estate, and no part of said claim having ever been paid—have filed their claim in the Treasury Department asking that the proceeds of said cotton be paid to them: Now, therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the heirs at law of said George D. Moore be, and the same is hereby, transferred from the Treasury Department to the Court of Claims, with power to said court to hear and determine the same de novo.

SEC. 2. That should said court determine that one hundred and twelve bales of cotton, or any part thereof, belonging to said George Dudley Moore was seized by the agent or assistant agent of the Treasury Department unlawfully after June 30, 1865, then judgment shall be rendered by it for the proceeds of said one hundred and twelve bales, or such part thereof as came into the Treasury of the United States, without interest.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized to pay off and discharge such judgment, if any, as may be rendered by said Court of Claims in behalf of said heirs at law against the United States Government, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 4. That all evidence on file with the claim of George Dudley Moore, or his heirs at law, in the Treasury Department shall be competent evidence, to be considered by the Court of Claims, and that either the Government or the claimants may present their evidence within such time and under such regulations as the Court of Claims may prescribe.

Mr. CONGER. I move to amend the motion to refer so as to refer the bill to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. MANNING. I do not know why it should go to the War Claims Committee. It seems clear to me that the Committee on the Judiciary is the proper committee to consider this bill, and therefore I have asked that it go there.

Mr. CONGER. This is one of a class of cases which the War Claims Committee have under consideration.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. CONGER; and upon a division there were—ayes 66, noes 69.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for the yeas and nays on my motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being 40 in the affirmative; more than one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I ask that the bill be again read.

The bill was again read.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the preliminary paragraph of Rule XI, together with the twenty-eighth paragraph of the same rule, be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, namely: Subjects relating—

28. To claims arising from any war in which the United States has been engaged: to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. MANNING. Is it in order to speak now to this matter of reference?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman for a brief statement, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] having had read the rule, which is in the nature of an argument.

Mr. MANNING. That is the reason I wanted to know if I should be heard.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order under the rule, but the Chair will hear the gentleman, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] has been heard.

Mr. MANNING. I have asked that this bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for the reason that when that committee shall come to consider the merits of the bill they will necessarily have to look into the history of the case as it has been developed in the Treasury Department. A claim against the United States was preferred by the heirs at law of George Dudley Moore. They presented evidence in support of their claim, and the Government introduced evidence to show that the seizure of one hundred and twelve bales of cotton was a proper one. Upon the issue joined the Secretary of the Treasury decided adversely to the claim of the heirs at law of George Dudley Moore.

Now, when the Committee on the Judiciary shall come to consider this bill (I have in the preamble of the bill recited the character of the case somewhat) if the committee shall decide that it has properly been disposed of adversely to the claims of George Dudley Moore on the merits of the questions involved, of course it will report adversely on the bill I have introduced. Any committee which may be charged with the consideration of this bill will be met at the very outset with legal questions to be disposed of. I do not suppose that the Committee on War Claims is the proper committee of this House to consider and dispose of legal questions.

I take it that if this case shall go to the Court of Claims, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] would be content with whatever judgment that court might pronounce in the case, presided over as it is by a republican judge. No harm will be done the Treasury of the United States if the Court of Claims shall pronounce judgment in the case.

Mr. CONGER. One word only; I will not detain the House long. Ever since the Committee on War Claims was established all this class of claims has been referred to them. I venture to say there are lawyers on that War Claims Committee who, from their constant attention to this subject, are better posted on the law regarding these claims than any other committee of the House. Besides that, the Committees on War Claims of former Congresses have been, and that committee in this Congress is, considering just what they will report to this House in regard to this class of claims. The rule provides that this bill shall go to the Committee on War Claims, which committee is now considering this subject. To divide up these matters and send some of them to other committees would certainly be wrong. I hope this bill, which is purely a war claim, will be referred to the committee having charge of this subject.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 121, nays 75, not voting 96; as follows:

Mr. WHITE. That should go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. It should either go to the Committee on Military Affairs or the Joint Committee on the Library.

Mr. STEELE. Well, I do not know where it ought to be referred. I have examined and can find nothing in the rules to guide me, but as this is for the erection of a monument to a "rebel general" I thought the appropriate reference was to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. WHITE. All of these bills have heretofore gone to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the Library Committee is the proper one.

Mr. CONGER. If I understood the gentleman from North Carolina, he said this bill should go to the Committee on War Claims because it provided for the erection of a statue to a rebel general?

Mr. STEELE. Yes, sir, that is what I said. He was so called by the government of Great Britain. [Laughter.]

To territorial legislation, the revision thereof, and affecting Territories or the admission of States: to the Committee on the Territories.

Mr. CONGER. I think that under this new rule the bill properly goes to the Committee on the Territories. I only spoke in regard to such matters having been heretofore sent to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill was referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. No. 2518) for the relief of Nelson Lyon and Jeremiah S. James; when the Speaker signed the same.

ROBERT L. MARTIN.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged question. I now enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which House resolution No. 255, for the relief of Robert L. Martin, was passed.

The SPEAKER. That is a bill which has been passed.

Mr. CONGER. I do not desire to call it up now; I wish to have time to examine into the matter.

Mr. HUNTON. I am ready to make an explanation in reference to the subject now if the gentleman wishes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can only enter the motion to reconsider at this time.

Mr. HUNTON. Does the gentleman desire an explanation?

Mr. CONGER. Not now, as it would take a considerable time; and I desire to examine the papers.

CHANGE OF HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask to present the following privileged question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, On and after Monday next the daily hour of meeting of the House be at eleven o'clock a. m.

Mr. ATKINS. Is that in order except by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It has been held to be in order—

Mr. ATKINS. If it requires unanimous consent, I object.

The SPEAKER. It might be introduced for reference.

Mr. ATKINS. I do not know how it is with the committee of the gentleman from Virginia; but so far as the Committee on Appropriations is concerned, we need the time in the morning.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. That committee has the right to sit during the sessions of the House.

Mr. ATKINS. But we want to be present during the sessions of the House. We need the morning for the meetings of the committee.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Does one objection prevent the consideration of this privileged question?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I thought it was a question of the highest privilege.

The SPEAKER. There is a mode of reaching it, but not in the way the gentleman proposes.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I do not offer it under a suspension of the rules; but I believe that a motion touching the hour of meeting of this House is a question of the highest consideration.

The SPEAKER. It may be one of the highest consideration, but as it changes the hour of meeting and therefore an order of the House, it is not a privileged question. The Chair admits under the practice such resolutions have been admitted, but it is not such a question as the gentleman has the right to offer as a privileged question.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The House should always have it within its power to say what should be the hour of its meeting.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to present it for reference under the call of States.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I am aware of that; but I think it is a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must differ with the gentleman in that respect.

LIMITING DEBATE IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

Mr. PRICE. I ask leave at this time to introduce the resolution which I offered this morning but to which objection was then made. I have now modified it so I think there will be no further objection to it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this House the fifth paragraph of Rule XXIII clearly forbids the continuation of debate on any bill in Committee of the Whole House after general debate has been closed by order of the House, except the five minutes on each side of the legitimate and bona fide amendments, and that pro forma amendments are in violation of said rule and should not be entertained by the Chair.

Mr. CONGER. That question arises every day, and the Chair will decide whether this House can in that way give construction to the rules. That is the duty of the Speaker of the House.

Mr. PRICE. This House can express an opinion; and if the House deems this resolution which I have introduced of a proper character and likely to accomplish the end obviously in view it will say so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that this resolution was introduced for reference.

Mr. PRICE. No; I introduced it for the purpose, if I can get it, of having action on it now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say in reference to this matter, and also in regard to the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HARRIS,] as well as other matters of this kind which may be introduced, that Rule XXVIII provides no standing rule or order of this House shall be rescinded or changed without one day's notice of the motion therefor.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I give notice that I will call up the resolution which I introduced for consideration to-morrow during the day.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I call for the regular order.

Mr. PRICE. Is my resolution before the House for consideration?

Mr. CONGER. I make the same objection to this resolution that I made before.

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman made an objection against the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia, but the resolution which I have presented is of an entirely different character. I do not seek to change a rule or order of the House; but simply that the House shall give a construction to one of the rules in order that we may be enabled thereby to facilitate the business of the House, and surely that is a question for the consideration of the House itself. It permits all appropriate amendments to be offered on bills, but carries out the intent and object of the House after the House has declared that all debate shall close in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman seeks to make a rule which will govern the Committee of the Whole, and in that respect he changes existing law and the practice of the House.

Mr. PRICE. The Chair will pardon me. I think a fair construction of the language which I have used in this resolution will not admit of any such conclusion. I desire the opinion of the House upon that point, and will ask that the Clerk read the resolution again.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. PRICE. Now let the Clerk read the fifth paragraph of the twenty-third rule.

Mr. CONGER. I do not suppose this discussion takes it beyond objection.

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair will recognize the gentleman's right to object.

The Clerk will read the clause referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

When general debate is closed by order of the House, any member shall be allowed five minutes to explain any amendment he may offer, after which the member who shall first obtain the floor shall be allowed to speak five minutes in opposition to it, and there shall be no further debate thereon; but the same privilege of debate shall be allowed in favor of and against any amendment that may be offered to an amendment; and neither an amendment nor an amendment to an amendment shall be withdrawn by the mover thereof unless by the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. PRICE. Now, if I can have consent for a moment, I desire to show that the only object I can possibly have in introducing this resolution is to facilitate the business of this House. For four months we have sat here, and I think it is a truth that no gentlemen will undertake to contradict when I say that we have done scarcely anything. It is also well known that the country is very much dissatisfied with our course here, and for my own part I would not care for that if the country was wrong and we were right; but the truth of the matter is the country is right and we are wrong.

In reference to the object to be attained by this resolution I will illustrate: We close, for instance, by a vote of this House all general discussion on a bill, say with two, three, or four hours' time, and then we commence the consideration of the bill by paragraphs, under the five-minute rule. Under the resolution just read by the Clerk, any gentleman on the floor can make a legitimate amendment and he has five minutes in which to discuss it, and five minutes are allowed on the other side in opposition to it. A strict construction of the rule would of course cut off debate at that point on this amendment, but it is continued without limit under these pro forma amendments. A gentleman rises and says: "I move to strike out the last word," and then follows a five-minute discussion, on either side, of that pro forma amendment; then another gentleman rises and moves to strike out the last word, and the same thing is gone over again, and then somebody moves to strike out the last two words, and the debate is unlimited and incessant.

Now, these motions have been made over a thousand times within my own observation, and I never yet have heard one single word of discussion in favor of the motion to strike out the last word. [Laughter.] The debate is always about something else not embodied in the amendment proposed at all and it is an evasion of the rule, and every gentleman here knows it is clearly evasion and nothing else. Now, I am desirous that we should get through with legislation here at all events before the 4th of March, 1881, and unless we adopt a resolution of the kind that I have introduced, and put a stop to this abuse, I am inclined to think that we never will get through. Three hundred men here have a right to "strike out the last word," one man after the other, and there is no telling where we will end.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the Chair to allow me one word. The gentleman from Iowa has exhibited the most striking proof of the necessity and propriety of the rule that could have been given. The gentleman has been compelled at this time—not being permitted by any rule of the House—to ask the indulgence of the House to enable him to make such remarks as gentlemen may want to make on a pro forma amendment when a bill is being discussed in the Committee of the Whole. I think the argument of the gentleman, taken in connection with his practice, is a sufficient reason why that resolution should not be considered. At any rate, I object.

Mr. PRICE. The objection of course comes with a very good grace from the gentleman from Michigan who is scarcely ever on the floor. Mr. CONGER. The House knows that without the gentleman from Iowa informing it. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman from Michigan is the last man on this floor I would have expected to make an objection to such a proposition as this. My only object is to transact the business for which we are here, and not waste time in pro forma amendments.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to have the resolution referred to the Committee on Rules?

Mr. PRICE. If I cannot do any better, let it go to the Committee on Rules.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules.

MOSES M. KERR.

Mr. O'REILLY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5518) to correct the records of the War Department by erasing the charge of desertion against Moses M. Kerr; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LOAN OF NATIONAL FLAGS.

Mr. HOUSE, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 268) authorizing the Secretary of War to lend United States flags to centennial commissioners at Nashville, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HOUSE. I ask that the joint resolution be now put upon its passage.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to lend to the centennial commissioners at Nashville, Tennessee, ten large national flags, taking from them such security as in his opinion may insure their safe return.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SMITH C. FERGUSON.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5519) granting a pension to Smith C. Ferguson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

Mr. KING, by unanimous consent, from the Select Committee on the Origin, Introduction, and Prevention of Epidemic Diseases, in the United States, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 4085, to increase the efficiency of the National Board of Health, a bill (H. R. No. 5520) having the same title; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

Mr. MCGOWAN. I am instructed by the Select Committee on Epidemic Diseases to report back the joint resolution (H. R. No. 224) to print 10,000 copies of the report of the National Board of Health, and ask that it be placed upon the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. As the joint resolution relates to printing it must go to the Committee on Printing if the cost will exceed $500. Will the cost exceed that amount?

Mr. MCGOWAN. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Then by law it must go to the Committee on Printing.

The joint resolution, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

REPORT OF YELLOW-FEVER COMMISSION.

Mr. MCGOWAN also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 225) to print 10,000 copies of the report of the yellow-fever commission.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing under the law.

INTERNATIONAL SANITARY CONFERENCE.

Mr. MCGOWAN. I am also instructed by the Select Committee on Epidemic Diseases to report back, with a favorable recommendation, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 195) authorizing the President to call an international sanitary conference to meet at Washington, District of Columbia. I ask that the report be printed, and that the bill be placed on the House Calendar. It does not make an appropriation.

The joint resolution was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY COMMISSIONERS OF CLAIMS.

Mr. ATHERTON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5521) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, and acts amendatory thereof; which was read a first and second time, and recommitted to the same committee, not to come back on a motion to reconsider.

TERRITORY OF ALASKA.

Mr. DAVIS, of California, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5522) for the organization of the Territory of Alaska, and providing for the establishment of a civil government therefor; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DUNN. I ask leave to make a report from the Committee on the Public Lands that it may be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. SPARKS. I do not understand that the call of committees for reports is now proceeding.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois object? This requires unanimous consent.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which is the morning hour for reports from committees.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I move to dispense with the morning hour so that we may proceed with the consular and diplomatic bill.

The motion of Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, was agreed to, there being—ayes 96, noes 36; two-thirds voting in the affirmative.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. CONVERSE in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3035) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee last rose the pending question was upon the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, to strike out lines 34 and 35, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For chargés d'affaires ad interim and diplomatic officers abroad, $30,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon this question debate was exhausted.

The amendment of Mr. McMILLIN was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of chargés d'affaires to Portugal, Denmark, Paraguay and Uruguay, and Switzerland, at $5,000 each, $20,000.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move to amend by adding to the clause just read the following:

Provided, In the case of the office of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary or minister resident, for which a salary was provided by the acts making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1879, or June 30, 1880, that when such position has been vacant for a consecutive period of four months or more, or when the duties thereof have been performed for the space of four months in any year by a chargé d'affaires, acting chargé d'affaires, or secretary of legation, the salary of such office shall be 50 per cent. of the amount herein appropriated for such office, and the remaining 50 per cent. shall be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I make the point of order that this is new legislation. It is not recommended by the committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the amendment embraces new legislation it is still not liable to the point of order, because it reduces expenditures. On its very face it does so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is in order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not desire to discuss the amendment. It speaks for itself. It provides merely that when any one of these offices has been vacant by reason of the absence of the minister for a period of four consecutive months in any one year, the salary appropriated to the office shall be 50 per cent. of the regular salary and it shall go to the subordinate officer discharging the duties of his absent principal; the other 50 per cent. to be covered into the Treasury. That is all.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 48, noes 64; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, and Mr. BLACKBURN were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 55, noes 70. So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move to amend by adding to the pending clause the following:

And provided, That no diplomatic or consular officer of the United States who shall be absent from the place or country to which he is accredited, for more than thirty days in any year, unless said absence is by order of the Secretary of State, and upon business directly connected with the duties of his office, shall receive any pay or compensation during the time of such absence in excess of thirty days.

Mr. MCCOOK. Would it be in order to amend this amendment so that the same provision shall apply to members of Congress?

Mr. PRICE. I think it ought to be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky is open to amendment.

Mr. MCCOOK. Well, I offer the amendment I have indicated.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will vote for the amendment if the Chair rules it in order, and am willing to reduce the time to one day instead of thirty.

Mr. MCCOOK. I prefer thirty days; one day is too short a time.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Not for me.

Mr. MCCOOK. If the words "Secretary of State" are in the gentleman's proposition, perhaps I had better not offer the amendment. I did not listen attentively; but if the provision in regard to the Secretary of State could be struck out, I would offer my amendment in good faith.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman from New York surely does not think that my amendment affects at all the salary of the Secretary of State.

Mr. MCCOOK. No, sir; but I would not like to provide that the Secretary of State shall grant leave of absence to members of Congress.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I thought the gentleman did not understand the proposition.

Mr. ATKINS. Let the amendment be again read.

The amendment of Mr. BLACKBURN was again read.

Mr. MCCOOK. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. Are we to infer from this amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky that a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States may be absent from his post thirty days without leave. I do not so understand. Such an officer, if absent, must have permission.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman will notice the amendment carefully, I think he will not consider it amenable to that criticism. It provides, not that these officers may be absent thirty days without leave, but that in the event of being absent for more than thirty days, unless under orders of the Secretary of State and upon business directly connected with the mission, the officer shall receive no pay for the period of his absence exceeding thirty days.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I have the provision of the law here, and will read it:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That no diplomatic or consular officer shall receive salary for the time during which he may be absent from his post (by leave or otherwise) beyond the term of sixty days in any one year: Provided, That the time equal to that usually occupied in going to and from the United States in case of the return, on leave, of such diplomatic or consular officer to the United States may be allowed in addition to said sixty days; and section 3 of act of March 30, 1868, is hereby repealed.

It will be seen by this provision of the law that these officers have sixty days' leave of absence during each year, but they cannot receive payment for any period of time above and beyond the sixty days.

Mr. BLACKBURN's amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the salary of the secretary to the legation (when acting also as interpreter) at China, $5,000.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move, in line 54, to strike out $5,000 and in lieu thereof to insert $2,500. Now, sir, it is a fact, and I doubt not my friend from Mississippi knows it, that the present secretary of legation in China receives $5,000, and that only because he is acting as interpreter there. I think the gentleman from Mississippi is aware (I am sure he is if he has made inquiry at the State Department) that representations have been made by diplomatic representatives, or some of them, in China that in respect to the duties discharged by that secretary of legation, including the services he renders as interpreter, they can be supplied by equally efficient men for one-fifth of the pay he now gets. I am sure I hazard nothing in saying that such protests are on file in the State Department now against the continuation of the appropriation of $5,000 for that purpose, and declaring the duties are merely nominal, and that men there who have been educated in this country, though natives of China, can be found and through them provision made for all the interpreting services we need there at one-fifth the cost we are now bestowing upon it.

Mr. BURROWS. Is the gentleman at liberty to disclose from what source these protests come?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have been as accurate and definite as any gentleman has reason to ask. I undertake to say protests are on file from foreign representatives of this Government in the State Department, and private protests to the President of this country, too.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I do not know what information the gentleman from Kentucky may have in his possession; but I know from consultation with the Secretary of State that it is his opinion this salary is a reasonable one. You find that this party has double duty to perform. In the first place he is secretary of legation, and in the next place he is interpreter to that legation.

Now, the gentleman from Kentucky on Saturday undertook to declare that the salaries fixed by this bill for interpreters to some other legations were controlled and governed by my religious bias. I give the gentleman an opportunity this morning to say whether he intended to intimate to the House and the country that I was influenced the hundredth part of a hair's breadth by any religious bias of my own in making up this item of the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Chairman, I am amazed at the sensitiveness of the gentleman from Mississippi; but I am glad he affords me the opportunity to declare that I never did suspect him of having any religious bias at all. [Laughter.] And there is not a man in this House or out of it who ever was further from intending to intimate that the gentleman in charge of this bill had allowed himself by reason of personal acquaintance or any personal considerations to change one iota of the provisions of the measure. It was not possible, in my judgment, for him to do that. What I did mean was simply this: The interpreters to those two legations of which I was then speaking, according to the information I was possessed of, have but very little services to perform. They are both preachers, both missionaries, and I thought they found as the missionary business did not pay well this was a sort of religious donation from this Government to the foreign missionary system. [Laughter.]

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I hope the gentleman will not further consume my time.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Not at all.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, this is like the hundred and one other blunders which the gentleman has fallen into in the rabid speech he made a few days ago. Does he know who the interpreters are at these points? One of them, A. A. Garginlo, at Constantinople, is a naturalized Greek, as I understand, a man who has been there for years, and if he has any religious views I do not know what they are.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And a missionary besides.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. If he has any religious calling I know nothing about it. He is no missionary. The other is a man by the name of Thompson, as appears by the register of the State Department, and is not a missionary from any church, as I am told at the State Department, and is not in any sense of the word responsible to any sect in the country for his appointment or for his presence in the country.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I did not intimate he was.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. The gentleman speaks of my religious convictions. Yes; I have them and I thank God I have. My only regret is I am not always true to them.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I spoke not of your religious convictions. I spoke of the gentleman's religious bias.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Wait a moment. It would be a good thing for the gentleman and for his constituents, and a matter of security to him, if he had some stronger religious convictions than any one thinks of crediting him with. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Not now.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does he parade himself either as an encouraging or frightful example of religious conviction. [Laughter.]

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Well, I do not think the gentleman fit to be an example for anybody. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am afraid my friend is losing his good temper.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. At all events, in such matters I should hate to see the church intrusted to your keeping, and in this your best friends will agree with me. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is necessary that these interpreters should be intelligent, well-informed men. There is much depending upon the interpretation they give to matters and things. If they are dishonest men, they can be used in the interest of the governments to which our consuls are accredited. In other words, they might have such bias in favor of their own country or of some other country as would work great detriment to ours. In some cases these parties receive $1,500, and it runs up as high as $3,000. But in order to get good men and efficient ones for service of this kind it is a well-understood fact that you are compelled to pay good salaries. You cannot obtain them otherwise, and I am surprised to hear the gentleman say that $5,000 is more than an adequate remuneration or compensation for an educated, reliable man, speaking two languages, acting as secretary of legation and interpreter at the same time.

Mr. HUNTON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Yes, if it is pertinent to this point.

Mr. HUNTON. I should certainly not ask the gentleman an impertinent question. What I desire to call his attention to is this: that according to this bill there is only a clerk to the legation at Spain at a salary of $1,200 a year, and for the legation at China there is a secretary as well as a clerk. Now what I want to ask is, why it is important to have a clerk at the legation at China and not in Spain? It seems to me that there can be no good reason for making such a difference as this.

Mr. BAKER. But you have a secretary and clerk in Spain.

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir. Here is line 51, which provides for the clerk to the legation at Spain $1,200.

Mr. ORTH. Look at line 45 and the gentleman will see that there is also a secretary provided for Spain.

Mr. HUNTON. And here you have provided for the secretary of legation in China the sum of $5,000.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Will the gentleman from Virginia be kind enough to turn back to line 45 and he will see that there is a secretary of legation provided for Spain, as well as a clerk.

Mr. HUNTON. But I notice in addition that the clerk and the secretary in Spain together get the sum of $2,800, while the secretary of legation while acting as interpreter in China gets the sum of $5,000. Now, here is the secretary and clerk in Spain who receive but $2,800, while the secretary alone in China gets $5,000. I am unable to see any reason for this difference. I believe that educated Chinese that come over here and receive their education in our schools can be procured to do that service provided for in this section of the bill for the sum of $1,000.

A MEMBER. Or $1,200 at the outside.

Mr. HUNTON. They can be obtained at a cost not exceeding $1,000 I am convinced. I think, therefore, the salary of $2,500 for this secretary, as provided in the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, is more than sufficient to secure the services of an interpreter in China, and I trust that the amendment he offers will prevail, because I think $1,000 will secure effective and faithful service in this connection.

Mr. ORTH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question before he sits down?

Mr. HUNTON. Certainly.

Mr. ORTH. Would the gentleman be willing to employ an unnaturalized foreigner in an American legation?

Mr. HUNTON. Why, as interpreters, beyond all question. There may be foreigners not only employed as interpreters but even as consular agents.

Mr. ORTH. Not unnaturalized foreigners?

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, as consular agents to conduct our business. Why, my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] awhile ago said one of these parties was an unnaturalized Greek.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. That is one of the gentleman's missionaries, but naturalized as I understand. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUNTON. But I insist $2,500 is more than sufficient.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. BLACKBURN; and on a division it was rejected—ayes 29, noes 63.

Mr. WARNER. I move to strike out "five" and insert "four" in line 54; so that it will read:

For the salary of the secretary to the legation (when acting also as interpreter) at China, $4,000.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 36, noes 57.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For the salary of the interpreter to the legation in Turkey, $3,000.

For the interpreter to the legation at Japan, $2,500.

For contingent expenses of foreign intercourse proper, and of all the missions abroad, $80,000.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 61, "and no ambassador, envoy extraordinary, minister resident, chargé d'affaires, secretary of legation, or attaché of legation, not mentioned in this bill, shall be entitled to, nor shall he be paid, any salary or compensation of any kind whatsoever; and all laws or parts of laws authorizing the payment to such officers of any salaries or compensation of any kind, except as herein provided, are hereby repealed."

Mr. FROST. I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN;] and I only regret that it is not possible under the rules of this House and under what I conceive to be a proper appreciation of the duties incumbent upon us to strike out the whole of Schedule A from line 1 to line 61 of the bill. I believe, sir, it would be far better for the interests of this country abroad, and it would certainly result in a large saving, if we were enabled to abolish all this ambassadorial, ministerial, or missionary system; whatever it may be called.

We have abroad, in a number of capitals of Europe, gentlemen under the name of ambassadors plenipotentiary and other long-sounding titles, who to my certain knowledge, as I have had some experience both in traveling in those countries and reading the reports made by these gentlemen, have absolutely nothing to do. We are appropriating for the purpose of supporting these gentlemen sums aggregating $420,000. I believe, sir, that three-fourths of that amount might be saved, and that one minister abroad would be amply sufficient for all purposes. Whenever any complication arises with a European power it always becomes necessary for us to commission some special ambassadors in order to represent us. The only services which these representatives of ours abroad render are to introduce to foreign courts such American travelers as are desirous of basking in the smiles of royalty. That is what they do, so far as they act at all. They are not representatives of our political or commercial intercourse with foreign nations, but are merely gentlemen ushers to our travelers in Europe for the purpose of introducing them to foreign potentates.

I recollect the experience I had in 1872 in common with many other Americans who were traveling in Europe at that time. There was then located at the court of St. James as first secretary of legation to General Schenck a gentleman of the name of Moran. I found it necessary to visit Switzerland and intended to pass by way of Paris. I was then at college in England. I called at our ministry. I had letters certifying to my identity from the rector of the university at which I was studying. I had letters from prominent gentlemen in London sufficient to enable me to obtain money at the banks. But when I went to introduce myself to Mr. Moran with these credentials as an American citizen demanding a passport, he told me he did not know me. I told him that was perfectly correct, but I had brought letters of introduction. He said he did not know the gentlemen writing the letters. I told him that was a matter of common occurrence in Europe, but that those letters enabled me to draw money at the bank and if he talked with me for five minutes he might know I was an American citizen. He still declined to furnish me with a passport. I then asked him whether an introduction from the ambassador from Austria, Count Apponyi, with whom I happened to be acquainted, would suffice. He said, "No; I do not know the Count Apponyi." I had to leave the office without obtaining my passport.

I then went to the minister of Belgium and from him obtained a passport or what was equivalent thereto and was obliged to avoid Paris and go around to Switzerland by way of Belgium and the Rhine. I offer that as a fair sample of the reception given to American citizens by men who have resided at the European courts so long that they are not willing to know any one who is not at least a sovereign of some country or other. I went there under the impression that I was a sovereign as far as every American citizen was; but I came away under the full conviction that our American ambassadors knew no one of lower rank than kings; and that as they were constantly associated with emperors and men of such degree they thought that we ordinary travelers had no rights which they considered themselves entitled to respect.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know the details of the special complaint which has just been made; but I desire to say a word for Mr. Moran, who is known to all gentlemen concerned with our foreign intercourse and to a large number of the members of foreign legations as for a great number of years connected with our diplomatic intercourse. He is known further to be a man of the highest character, and his late promotion to be minister at Portugal was considered a recognition in an especial sense of the good service rendered by a most admirable representative of the American Government abroad. What mistake he may have made in this particular case I do not know.

Mr. COX. I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. PRICE. I must make the point of order on my friend from New York. I mean nothing personal, but I must insist that this striking out of the last words should stop.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa will state the point of order to which he has risen.

Mr. PRICE. I make the point of order under the fifth clause of Rule XXIII that when an amendment is offered it is subject only to a speech of five minutes in favor and five minutes against; and that when general debate has been closed by order of the House it cannot by any maneuver of this kind be continued against the order of the House. The Chair must see, if this is to continue every gentleman in this House might move to strike out the last word on which there might be ten minutes' speaking, and three hundred times ten minutes would take a great many days.

Now if the rule is to be observed in its spirit and letter, none but legitimate bona fide amendments can be entertained under the fifth clause of Rule XXIII. There will be no end to debate if any other course is followed.

The CHAIRMAN. It has always been the custom in Committees of the Whole to allow such motions.

Mr. PRICE. I know it.

The CHAIRMAN. And it would be a very hard rule indeed to impose upon any chairman of the Committee of the Whole the duty of determining what might be the effect of any amendment. The Chairman cannot determine whether an amendment is made in good faith or not, or what may be the effect of it, whether to destroy the pending proposition or to improve it and make it better. The remedy of the gentleman is to object to the withdrawal of any amendment and to require a vote upon it.

Mr. PRICE. If the Chair will bear with me a moment; I do not desire to take up too much time. I know the Chair in making the ruling he has is doing just what has been done by other chairmen for years past. I know that I am undertaking a Herculean task when I undertake to bring about a correction of this evil. The Chair knows that the remedy which he suggests is really no remedy at all; because the gentleman from New York—and I hope he will not consider that I am doing this out of any disregard for him—

Mr. COX. Certainly not.

Mr. PRICE. When the gentleman from New York has made his five-minute speech on his motion, and another gentleman makes a five-minute speech in reply, then, if no objection is made, the gentleman from New York will withdraw his motion, and it may be renewed by any other member. Even if objection is made to the withdrawal, and the vote is taken upon the pro forma amendment and decided in the negative, any other gentleman can make the same motion; and so it will go on ad infinitum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that an amendment once voted down cannot be renewed; and no amendment can be withdrawn except by unanimous consent.

Mr. PRICE. The Chair will understand that when an amendment to strike out the last word is voted upon and decided in the negative, then an amendment to strike out the last two words would be in order, and after that an amendment to strike out the last three words, and then the last four words, and so on to the end of the chapter. I have arisen only—

Mr. MCCOOK. Allow me to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PRICE. Certainly.

Mr. MCCOOK. If the construction which the gentleman puts upon the rule is a correct one, would it not put an additional limitation on debate when debate is already sufficiently limited?

Mr. PRICE. I am glad the gentleman has asked the question. I say that debate is not sufficiently limited. The House makes an order that after two or three or four hours of general debate all general debate shall cease, and the Committee of the Whole shall then proceed to consider the bill under the five-minute rule. Yet every gentleman here knows, without my saying it, that if amendments to strike out the last word or the last two words or the last three words, and so on without any limit, are allowed to be made and discussed, there is practically no limitation to debate and the Committee of the Whole will never cease debating, the order of the House to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. COX. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX. I understood the Chair to decide that I could speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided the point of order, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] will proceed.

Mr. AIKEN. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] allow me a minute or two for a question?

Mr. COX. Certainly.

Mr. AIKEN. The gentleman from New York has the floor, I believe, and he allows me two minutes. [Laughter.] I desire to say that I am entirely in accord with the gentleman from Iowa, and he and I will vote directly together on his proposition, for I agree with him entirely.

Since the first meeting of the extra session of the Forty-fifth Congress I have kept a sort of diary of debate in this House, and I now desire to give to this House the benefit of that information.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman—

Mr. AIKEN. I have two minutes; please sit down. [Laughter.] Of all the debaters in this House twenty-eight members consume 71 per cent. of the entire time consumed in debate.

Mr. COX. The gentleman got the floor on the promise to ask me a question.

Mr. AIKEN. I will ask the gentleman a question. Can he dispute the fact that twenty-eight men on the floor of this House consume 71 per cent. of the entire time taken up in debate? [Laughter.] Northwestern members consume 9 per cent. of the balance of the time; southern members 10 per cent.; and one gentleman from Michigan consumes 10 per cent. The remainder of the time is consumed by northern democrats. I ask the gentleman how much time that is? [Laughter.] That is the question I have to ask him.

Mr. COX. I am cut short in my time somewhat.

Mr. BLACKBURN and others. Go on!

Mr. COX. I was cut short when I was young. [Laughter.] It was my misfortune not to be present at the opening of this debate, yet my friend on the other side must object to my speaking now, knowing I was somewhat referred to if not attacked in debate on Saturday, and my interesting friend from South Carolina must become irrelevant in so far as to call in question all the logicians members of this House. Now where is my five minutes? [Laughter.] I ask leave to print my remarks. [See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection. [Renewed laughter.] The question is on striking out the last word.

Mr. COX. I withdraw that small amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment moved by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN.]

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio. Before the committee passes to the consideration of Schedule B, I desire to offer an amendment to lines 24 and 25 of Schedule A. I was not in the House on Saturday at the time these lines were under consideration. I therefore ask unanimous consent to offer the amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I reserve the point of order until I hear the amendment read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 24 and 25, strike out $5,000, and insert $7,500; so as to make the clause read:

"For minister resident and consul-general at Bolivia, $7,500."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I make the point of order.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. We have passed this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky will state his point of order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In the first place, we have passed the clause of the bill to which this amendment applies, and the gentleman has no right to go back except by unanimous consent, which I reserved the right to withhold until I could hear the amendment read. I now make the point that we have passed this.

I make the further point that under Rule XXI the amendment is not in order, because, though germane to the subject-matter, it does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to withhold the point of order long enough to allow my colleague [Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio] to make a statement.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I withhold the point, to hear the gentleman's statement.

Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the compensation of the representative of the United States Government at Bolivia is away below what it ought to be when we take into consideration, first, the importance of Bolivia to the United States in a commercial point of view; and, secondly, the high price in that country of provisions such as an American would be willing to live on.

Besides, this bill provides no clerk, no chargé d'affaires, no assistant whatever to this officer. He is named resident minister and consul-general, without a clerk, without assistant. It does seem to me that, in view of the importance of Bolivia as compared with other South American republics, my amendment ought to be adopted in order to dignify the representative of our Government at that place. The gentleman who has just been appointed to the position is a first-class man and ought to get first-class pay.

We ought not to starve our officers at home by low wages, as there seems to be an attempt on the part of this Congress to do; and certainly, when we send men abroad to represent this country and its interests, commercial and political, we ought at least to dignify the office by paying the officer enough salary to live on.

I ask that by unanimous consent this amendment may be put to a vote of the committee. As a question of parliamentary proceeding, I cannot see why the business of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union cannot be conducted under the rules in as liberal a way as that of any standing committee of the House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now renew my point of order, though I have no disposition to interrupt any gentleman who desires to speak on this question.

Mr. WHITE. Who is the appointee to this mission?

Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio. If the gentleman from Kentucky will permit me, I will state that the gentleman recently appointed to this position is General Adams, who during this last winter took his life in his hands and went among the Ute Indians upon a mission of humanity—to get from the hands of the Utes the Meeker family. For this distinguished service General Adams has been justly rewarded by having conferred upon him by the Administration the mission to Bolivia. He is a man whose life and character have been marked by self-sacrifice; and now, when the Government has acknowledged his services by conferring upon him this office, it is proposed to cut down the compensation from $7,500 to $5,000 a year. It will cost him more than $1,000 to pay his expenses to this mission, and more than $4,000 a year to live there—decently, I mean. I suppose he could live on the salary here proposed, if he would live as the people down there live. But I hope this committee will consider that when a man is sufficiently distinguished to be sent to a foreign country as a representative of this great nation we ought at least to give him enough salary to enable him to support himself decently.

Mr. MCCOOK. With the permission of the gentleman from Kentucky, I wish to make one statement. General Adams has shown his courage and pluck by going in person among the Ute Indians when perhaps not another white man in the United States could have been induced to go there, and by insisting upon the surrender of the principal chiefs who had taken part in the attack upon Major Thornburgh and his command. In this way General Adams unquestionably saved this Government from a long and bloody Indian war, which would probably have cost us millions of dollars. It seems to me every one who knows the man will concede that this salary should be allowed him in acknowledgment of his services. I think the House of Representatives might with very great propriety make this very small recognition of the devoted service which General Adams has rendered.

A MEMBER. Is he an Ohio man?

Mr. MCCOOK. No, nor a New York man; he is a Colorado man.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to join in the testimony borne to the character of this gentleman. Within the last three days he has been a witness before a committee of investigation of this House, to which I belong, and I very cheerfully bear testimony to the favorable impression he made upon my mind as worthy of every compliment that has been paid to him. But I do not think this is the way to recognize such services as he has rendered, distinguished as they have been. It had better be done by special act of Congress than by raising the pay of one of these foreign missions.

At the outset of the discussion on this bill I stated to the House that it was not my idea to restrict the diplomatic or consular system or cripple it in any wise by reduction of compensation. I have offered no amendment to reduce the salary of any of our foreign ministers; I do not intend to do so. But I do intend to insist upon a point of order upon any amendment looking to an increase of the salaries of these ministers as reported in the bill. With all deference to the request made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. YOUNG,] I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the point of order is well taken.

The Clerk read as follows:

SCHEDULE B.

For the agent and consul-general at Cairo, $4,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move pro forma to amend by striking out the last word. I do this simply to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] a question. He asked leave awhile ago to print some remarks, stating that he had been assailed in the House, and I understood he had reference to me. I would like to know whether this is the fact, for certainly I had no such purpose.

Mr. COX. I rose a few moments ago for the purpose of saying to the House, as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, that any intimation that we have been derelict in providing by law for a new consular and diplomatic system was not authorized by the facts in so far as it referred to myself.

It was said by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] that I have opposed again and again in this House the expensive and useless diplomacy by which our Treasury is so much depleted and for which there is no adequate compensation in the services rendered.

Why should we not withdraw from the salary of diplomats, &c., just as much money as is possible to aggrandize the consular system?

The great need of this country is the extension of trade. Let us find new avenues and opportunities for our commerce. Why, therefore, should I not feel some resentment at remarks made on Saturday by gentlemen, inasmuch as I could not tell under the rules what took place in the Foreign Affairs Committee?

If the truth were known, its chairman should be not reproached in the slightest degree for any seeming neglect. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSEND] referred to me, and to my committee to which he sent a general resolution, asking for a radical change in this diplomatic system. Now I say, since it has been discussed here, that I have twice brought before that committee his resolution. I may say with propriety that committee is disinclined to make any such change as he recommended. So far as I am personally concerned I have debated the matter involved in his resolution here years ago—year after year—till to me it is threadbare. My then colleague, [Mr. Hewitt,] who was on the Foreign Affairs Committee, made an exhaustive speech of the same tenor. I collected from the Hansard English debates, as he had from the Globe and our RECORDS, all that was worthy to be authority on a point of this kind.

My friend from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] follows in this path. He would strike down these useless ministerial appendages. I cheer him in his work. In this day of newspapers, steamships, railroads, and telegraphs—marine and terrestrial—and when the appliances of our civilization are making their marvels of advancement, is it not time to disuse a system so futile, feudal, and utterly effete? Why not so restore us even to the old-fashioned plan of "non-entangling alliances," which our fathers recommended, and which in my more elaborate speech on this bill I will show they recommended as infinitely superior to the unrepresentative diplomatic methods now in vogue? Why not combine all Europe, or South America, or Central America, or the Pacific coast, China, and Japan, into one embassy, and remit the great bulk of our commercial and foreign work to our consulate system?

However that system may be executed, is it not consummate?

Sir, we have a splendid consular system. It does not need much reform. Here is a book prepared at the State Department which is worth study. It ramifies all through our commerce, and into all its vicissitudes, enterprises, and fortunes. Now, when we are seeking these foreign avenues of trade, I would enhance and strengthen the commercial agencies. To do that, abolish these luxurious and inordinate salaries for ambassadors and their satellites, whose only business seems to be to dine at cafés abroad, to dance attendance on nobility, to listen to the gossiping of those who have no sympathy with republicanism, and who return to us undemocratized, denationalized, de novo, at their elegant leisure and abundant pleasure, after gallivanting all through Europe at the expense of a tax-paying and hard-working people.

Mr. BLOUNT. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill who is the consul-general at Shanghai now?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. You will find that information by looking at the register of the State Department. I do not keep these names in my mind.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman were as well advised about this bill as he seems to be posted in religion, he might be able to give me this information. [Laughter.] I suspect it is a man by the name of Loring.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Probably.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether he knows or does not know that man stands to-day under indictment for frauds committed on the internal revenue of this Government?

Mr. NEAL. I think the gentleman's name is Denny, from the State of Oregon.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Is not Loring consul-general at Shanghai now?

Mr. NEAL. No; Denny is.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman has the Blue Book before him.

Mr. NEAL. He has been appointed within a few weeks.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In place of whom?

Mr. NEAL. In place of Mr. Bailey.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I knew Mr. Bailey had been retired; but I want to know whether this consulate is filled now; and, if not, which one is filled by Loring, who was at Hong-Kong and then sent to Shanghai?

Mr. NEAL. That is Mr. Bailey.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I know the record of Mr. Bailey. The country, unfortunately, is familiar with that record.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question before the committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am asking a question of the gentleman in charge of this bill. I find from the register of the State Department—

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I have no further information on the matter than is derived from the register of the State Department; and if the gentleman wants further information he will have to go elsewhere to get it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I did not expect to get it from the gentleman in charge of the bill when I asked. Mr. Bailey stands on the Blue Book as consul at Shanghai. Mr. Bailey is no longer consular representative of this Government anywhere. I wanted to know who his successor was.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Denny, of Oregon, appointed some time ago. That is an answer to the gentleman.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I know Mr. Loring was appointed by Mr. Bailey as vice-consul at Hong-Kong, but was taken and removed to Shanghai. Now, Mr. Bailey has gone out of that consulate, and I desire to know whether Mr. Loring has been left there?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. What have I to do with that? I have not made the appointments.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I want to have something to do with it if the gentleman can give me the information he is possessed of.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I give you the information I find in the register of the State Department lately printed and presented to this House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. We know that is not correct, because that man represented as the consul-general at Shanghai is no longer in the consular and diplomatic service of this country anywhere.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? If the merit of General Adams does not entitle him to an increase of compensation, why should the demerit of Mr. Loring require a reduction?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer the gentleman by asking this question: Is the morale of the diplomatic service of this country to be elevated by retaining in position a man who has fled from his country for frauds committed in the revenue but who has since held positions at a high salary in the consular service abroad?

Mr. BAYNE. I think not, if those facts are known.

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to a question of order. I wish to know whether there is an amendment pending?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment now pending before the committee.

Mr. NEAL. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, when I make a mistake I am always very willing and ready to correct it. In the first session of the Forty-fifth Congress, when the consular and diplomatic bill was under consideration, I defended in this bill Mr. Bailey, against whom some charges were made, and I defended him from information which I then believed to be correct. At that time he was consul at Hong-Kong, and had been nominated to succeed Mr. Seward as consul-general of Shanghai. That nomination was pending for several weeks in the Senate, and no information was given to this House or to the Senate showing that there was any dereliction of duty on his part. I find, however, that I was mistaken in defending him, and that the very charges made against him at the time, and which I had reason from information in my possession to believe were false, have been proved to be correct. I want, therefore, to take back all that I said on that occasion in his defense.

Mr. HUNTON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. NEAL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUNTON. I understood the gentleman to state that while the nomination of Mr. Bailey was pending before the Senate there was no information before the Senate or the House that he was unworthy.

Mr. NEAL. That was what I stated.

Mr. HUNTON. Now, will the gentleman permit me to ask him if he did not know, as I have heard stated, that there was information in the State Department upon that very subject—information that he had been guilty of defrauding the Government out of many thousands of dollars?

Mr. NEAL. I will answer that question, Mr. Chairman. This summer I met one of our naval officers, a man of high standing and character, who I ascertained had been upon the Pacific coast for several years, and I learned from him the charges against Mr. Bailey were true, and that Bailey was guilty of what I stated here he was innocent of. Upon my return to Washington I called upon Mr. Secretary Evarts and laid before him the facts which had come into my possession from this naval officer, and the Secretary of State told me then that he had no knowledge of the facts at the time his nomination for the consulate at Shanghai was pending.

The Secretary stated further that he had no interest whatever in Mr. Bailey; that he had appointed him because he was in the line of promotion, and that if he had had any intimation that the charges against him were true, he would not have appointed him at all. He took the place, and one of our consuls on the Pacific coast, General Stahl I think, or some other consul, was sent to investigate the charges against Mr. Bailey, on a letter written by General Mosby; and those charges were found to be true, and Mr. Bailey was at once recalled.

Mr. HUNTON. Will my friend state to the committee the date of the promotion of Mr. Bailey?

Mr. NEAL. It was about two years ago. I cannot state the exact time.

Mr. HUNTON. Well, I will state to my friend from Ohio that I hold in my hand the correspondence between the State Department and General Mosby as consul at Hong-Kong, and General Stahl as consul at Yokohama, in which is disclosed to the State Department that this very man Bailey was a defaulter to the Government to the amount of probably $100,000, and the very first letter of this correspondence, letter No. 1, bears date Hong-Kong, February 21, 1879.

Mr. NEAL. Very well, it was on the strength of that letter that General Stahl was sent to Yokohama and Hong-Kong to make these investigations.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. NEAL. I hope the committee will give me a few moments longer.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

Here the committee informally rose; and Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the House joint resolution of the following title:

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 237) directing the Secretary of the Navy to organize a board to inquire into the present condition of the double-turreted monitors and the propriety and cost of completing said vessels.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I ask the gentleman to allow me just one word. I wish to correct another of the errors of the gentleman from Kentucky. Loring was never consul at Shanghai. He was vice-consul at Hong-Kong, and was dismissed by Colonel Mosby on his taking charge of that consulate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I undertake to say that is not correct. I state it on the authority, the best to be had on earth; he left Hong-Kong only to be promoted to a more important place.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I make the statement on the authority of Mr. Cowie, Fifth Auditor of the Treasury Department, who has charge of the auditing and allowance of all consular and diplomatic expenses, and is possessed of the best sources of information on this subject.

Mr. NEAL. What makes the case of Mr. Bailey the more melancholy in my estimation is the fact that he is from the State of Ohio. But, sir, I have this consolation, that there are exceptions to all general rules, and Mr. Bailey's misconduct serves to present in stronger contrast the unsullied purity and the incomparable honesty of the people of that great State. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following paragraph:

For salaries of consuls, vice-consuls, commercial agents, and thirteen consular clerks, $304,600, namely:

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. My task is truly a laborious one, namely, to correct all the blunders made by my friend from Kentucky in his speech on Saturday last. In reference to this item—

For salaries of consuls, vice-consuls, commercial agents, and thirteen consular clerks, $304,600, namely—the gentleman announced on Saturday to the House with apparent pleasure that my figures were false; that he had discovered a mistake in the calculation of $1,000.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I said $1,100.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I give the gentleman the benefit of the difference. Now, the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations has gone over the calculation and I am assured it is quite correct. So there goes another of the gentleman's charges.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well, if the gentleman in charge of this bill ostensibly, is content with his figures, I am. But I know this: I know there is a mistake of $1,100 in that computation; unless the gentleman proposes to say that five of the thirteen consular clerks allowed and established by law must receive $1,200 a year instead of $1,000. I state now, just as I stated on Saturday, if the gentleman has allowed $1,200 for five of the consular clerks instead of $1,000, there is a mistake of $100, otherwise there is a mistake of $1,100. The gentleman from Mississippi never makes mistakes! He is oracular and infallible.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Oh, no!

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now, the gentleman said he had made no provision for any consular clerk at Collingwood. I leave it to the record; I leave it to the law; I leave it to the Blue Book, to the Congressional Directory which I hold in my hand, which shows that under the law the President who assigns thirteen consular clerks has assigned one to Collingwood. His name is Gustavus Goward, and he is there now as a consular clerk.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I hold the bill in my hand, and I ask the gentleman to point out to me where Collingwood is named.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman is not able to understand his own bill when it is read to him—

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I ask the gentleman to show it to me.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman will sit down I will show it to him.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. What is the question pending?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question pending.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move to strike out the last word.

I will point the gentleman from Mississippi to a part of the bill he seems not to have read; and we are there at that line this very instant. Here is an appropriation made—

For salaries of consuls, vice-consuls, commercial agents, and thirteen consular clerks—of which thirteen Mr. Gustavus Goward, posted at Collingwood, is one under the law at this day. Does the gentleman want to find it in the bill more plainly than that?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Let me say to the gentleman that these thirteen consular clerks are provided by law.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And you, at line 82 of your bill, provide for their payment.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. They are provided for by law, and the Secretary of State has the right to assign them to any point he thinks proper.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman is mistaken again.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. If he chooses to assign one to Collingwood we have nothing to do with that. The bill provides nothing of the sort. It merely provides for thirteen consular clerks, to be stationed where the Secretary of State may assign them. Sometimes he places them at one point, sometimes at another, as circumstances or the exigencies of the case may demand. But there is no provision specifically in this bill for a consular clerk at Collingwood; and if the Secretary of State chooses to assign one there I am not responsible, because the law gives him that privilege.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now, after the gentleman has made a speech in my time, I will restate what he cannot get away from. In line 82 of this bill provision is made for thirteen consular clerks. With his usual accuracy the gentleman is mistaken again in what he stated as to these clerks. The Secretary of State has no authority to assign these clerks anywhere.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I know the contrary.

Mr. BLACKBURN. You cannot make another speech in my time. The President of the United States has the authority to assign these thirteen clerks wherever he pleases. He has assigned one to Collingwood, and he is there to-day and drawing his salary there to-day; and this bill, at line 82, provides for his payment. I was exactly correct in the statement I made.

Now, sir, to illustrate the accuracy of the other side of this matter, I read from the RECORD an extract from the speech made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] on Saturday last. He says this: "I state as a fact"—of course the gentleman states nothing except as a fact—"I state as a fact that at Goderich we have provided for no consul and no clerk."

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Allow me to say—

Mr. BLACKBURN. Wait a minute. I have read the gentleman's own words from the RECORD. Now, let us turn to page 8 of this bill. I find there under class 6, at a salary of $1,500 per annum, that he makes provision for a clerk for Goderich, Canada West. Now, when the gentleman gets through reconciling his statement of facts—"facts" underscored—with his own bill which names these places post by post, it will be time for him to call somebody else to account for inaccuracy.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I perhaps did fall into a blunder [laughter] in regard to a consul at Goderich. But I will refer gentlemen to two lines of the speech of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN,] where they will find that he has made two inaccurate statements.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let us have them.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I will give them to you. The gentleman asserted that we had no consul at Goderich, and that we had provided a clerk for that point.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I corrected that and said "Collingwood," and the RECORD shows it.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Well, here is the RECORD. Now if in one line and a half—for it just amounts to that—the gentleman can make two such mistakes as that—

Mr. BLACKBURN. I pardon the quibble; go on.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Quibble?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Quibble.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Very well; now we have a consul at Goderich, yet the gentleman said we had none. We have not given a clerk to Goderich, although the gentleman said we had. We therefore find that he has made two blunders in just one line and a half. Now [addressing Mr. BLACKBURN] own up like a gentleman and be done with it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. I must confess that I never knew a man before, proverbial for his fairness, who would quote a statement in the RECORD which the man uttering it had corrected in the same RECORD, and suppress the correction.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment has expired.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I withdraw my pro forma amendment to strike out the last word.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

For salaries of consuls, vice-consuls, commercial agents, and thirteen consular clerks, $304,600, namely:

Class I.—At $4,000 per annum.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Hong-Kong.

HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

Honolulu.

Class II.—At $3,500 per annum.

CHINA.

Foochow; Hankow; Canton; Amoy; Tien-Tsin; Chin-Kiang; Ningpo.

Mr. HUNTON. I move to amend by striking out "Ningpo." My object is to dispense with the consulates at Canton, Chin-Kiang, and Ningpo, upon the ground that the report of the Fifth Auditor shows, at least to my mind, that these consulates are unnecessary.

Take the port of Canton, where the consul is paid $3,500 per annum. It will be found that the fees received at that consulate and reported to the Fifth Auditor amount to the sum of $459 a year. That fact indicates to my mind that there is no use for a consular agent of the Government at Canton, because the trade at that port, as evidenced by the fees reported to the Fifth Auditor, is not sufficient to pay the expense of a consular agent.

The truth is that this interior trade of China finds its way down the river and comes from that country through the port of Hong-Kong. And when you come to look at the consular fees at Hong-Kong you will find that they are very large. As was stated awhile ago in the debate between my friend from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] and myself, the consular agent removed from Hong-Kong to some other point, I believe to Shanghai, and suppressed fees due to the Government to the amount of about $100,000.

I state this to show that the trade of that country comes from Hong-Kong, and that there is no trade centering at Canton, and therefore no necessity for a consular agent at that point. I think the consular agents at Canton, Chin-Kiang, and Ningpo should be dispensed with. I therefore move to strike out the word "Canton."

Mr. DUNNELL. A single word in reply to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON.] I remember that during the investigation which was had before the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, when an intelligent merchant in China was before the committee, he was asked whether the consulate at Canton should be dispensed with. His reply was, that while at the present time the income of the office was small, yet considering its location it was important that a consul be appointed for that port.

Now the gentleman from Virginia well knows that our commerce in many of these ports has been built up quite recently, and we ought to watch the commerce in these ports as it is watched by the British government. We are paying for consular services in China a very much less sum even now than the English government is paying, and a very much less sum than that government has always paid to build up commerce with that country. Since the Burlingame treaty our commerce with that country has largely increased, and the commerce at these different ports must be taken care of. I think it would be very much against our interests as a commercial people to dispense with a consular officer at that point.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. HUNTON to strike out "Canton," and it was not agreed to; upon a division ayes 18, noes not counted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lisbon.

PORTUGAL.

Mr. NEAL. I move to amend by adding to the clause just read the following:

And the consul shall act as secretary of legation to the chargé d'affaires.

Mr. Chairman, the present chargé d'affaires at Lisbon, as I stated on Saturday, is Benjamin Moran, one of the most accomplished diplomats in the service of the United States. His health for years past has been failing. In fact it was stated upon this floor two years ago by Hon. A. S. Hewitt, of New York, then a member of the Committee on Appropriations, that Mr. Moran was dying by inches. Now the consul (and I speak from experience because I once held the position myself) has but very little to do. While there I was not employed on the average more than ten minutes a day. Yet, notwithstanding this, it would not have been advisable to abolish that consulate for the reason that monthly, or perhaps weekly, there came distressed seamen who had to be provided for and sent home by the consul. This is the reason it is important to have consuls at points where, judging from the returns of the office, there is apparently no necessity for a consul.

Now the consul at this point is not so much engaged that he cannot readily do the work of secretary of legation and acting chargé d'affaires, while Mr. Moran may be absent, as he often is on leave from the State Department, and as he should be whenever he asks for it, by reason of the services he has heretofore rendered the country. The consul can act as secretary of legation and chargé d'affaires in the absence of Mr. Moran, doing the work which would otherwise devolve upon the latter.

This provision will put upon the consul no labor he cannot readily discharge, while it will relieve Mr. Moran of work which he is ill prepared to do, by reason of the state of his health. I trust the amendment will be agreed to without objection. It involves no expense to the Government.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Is Mr. Moran a full minister?

Mr. NEAL. No, he is chargé d'affaires.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. The amendment proposes that the consul shall act in the absence of the chargé d'affaires.

Mr. NEAL. That he shall act as secretary for the chargé d'affaires, doing writing for him and such other work as Mr. Moran on account of the state of his health may be unable to do.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I should very much have preferred that the gentleman should have had some recommendation for this change from the Secretary of State. The question has not come before the committee, and I do not know what complications might result from the adoption of such a provision. I think it best that the amendment should not be made.

Mr. NEAL. Let me say one word further. When this measure was under consideration before, Mr. Hewitt, who was well acquainted with Mr. Moran, who knew the state of his health, favored the amendment; but it was then defeated by the opposition of the gentleman from Mississippi. I hope he will not oppose it now. It entails no expenses upon the Government. It simply does an act of justice to a very competent, faithful, and praiseworthy officer.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I do not like the blending of two offices in one. The Secretary of State has not recommended this, and therefore I think it would be imprudent to adopt it.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Beirut; Smyrna.

Class VI.—At $1,500 per annum.

Mr. NEAL. I move to amend by striking out $1,500, and I will state that my object in making this motion is afterward to insert the sum of $2,000.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I make a point of order.

Mr. NEAL. You cannot make a point of order on my first motion, which is simply to strike out. That is in the interest of economy.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a man learns a great deal more from experience than in any other way. From my experience in one of these consular positions I learned that a man cannot act as consul of the United States and live upon a salary of $1,500 a year. The consular service of our country is not only self-supporting, but it brings in a large revenue to the country; certainly it did so last year. It seems to me, therefore, that we can afford to pay our consular officers salaries upon which they can live without being compelled to steal, as some of them do. We have no right, Mr. Chairman, to make this branch of the Government a source of revenue; for in doing so we are taking money from the men who do business with this country. If we simply make the system self-supporting, that is all we have any right to do.

Now, as I have stated, our consular system brings in a large revenue; and one reason is because our consuls are not paid living salaries. While I was at Lisbon—a place where living is pretty cheap—I was obliged to spend two dollars for every one I received as salary, and I lived in a style in which I would not live in the city of Washington. I did not complain about my salary; I did what I believe every man ought to do under such circumstances: I resigned and came home. Now, then, I know by reason of this insufficient salary there were men abroad who were doing things which were forbidden, if not by law at least by consular regulations. I know they did not occupy a position in the country to which they were accredited which was a credit to the Government of the United States. Why, sir, the British consul, who had not the necessary expenses of the American consul at Lisbon, received $4,000 for his salary and $1,200 a year for office-rent, while the American consul at that time received $1,500 and $150 for office-rent, and was compelled by the regulations to keep his office in the busiest and most costly part of the city.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio. While I agree with him and disagree with the gentleman from Kentucky in the statement that the consular system is not paying its own expense, I nevertheless cannot consent that this change shall be made raising the salary from $1,500 to $2,000. On Saturday the gentleman from Kentucky stated on this floor that the consular system did not pay its expenses, but on the contrary brought the Government in debt from $100,000 to $200,000 per annum. I hold in my hand a statement from the Fifth Auditor for a series of ten years, and I find, after paying all expenses which have been necessary for our consular system, it paid into the Treasury $308,133.98. That does not embrace the year 1879. I have a letter from the Fifth Auditor in reference to the expense of the system and the fees for said year 1879, which I will send up and have read in order that the points of difference between the gentleman from Kentucky and myself may be settled.

The Clerk read as follows:

FIFTH AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., March 29, 1880.

SIR: In reply to your inquiry as to the amount of fees stated in the Fifth Auditor's report for the year ending June 30, 1879, referred to in the speech of Hon. J. C. S. BLACKBURN on Saturday last, differing from that reported by the Register of the Treasury, I have to state that the amount appropriated for the payment of salaries of consuls, vice-consuls, commercial agents, and thirteen consular clerks for 1879 was $304,600. The settlements as shown in Fifth Auditor's report cover all the above; also embraces all the fees collected by consuls, vice-consuls, commercial agents, and consular agents where there are no salaries provided by law. Fee consulates are authorized to retain the fees to an amount aggregating $2,500 for their own compensation; also office-rent and clerk-hire, subject to the approval of the Secretary of State, and any excess is paid over to the Treasurer of the United States; and in the same way with the fees of a consular agency, the agent is entitled to $1,000; the consul to an amount not to exceed $1,000 from all his agencies, and the balance only goes to the Treasury. Hence these fees retained by said consuls and consular agents are used for the benefit of the service, and are therefore properly credited in this report, although they are not reported by the Register. The amount, $682,901.18, reported by Fifth Auditor is correct. Consular clerks are entitled to $1,200 per annum after the first five years' service.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

GEORGE COWIE,
Chief Diplomatic and Consular Division,
Fifth Auditor's Office.

Hon. JAMES H. BLOUNT, M. C.,

House of Representatives.

Mr. NEAL withdrew his amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

GREAT BRITAIN.

Bristol, Newcastle, Auckland, Gibraltar, Cape Town, Saint Helena, Charlotte-town, (Prince Edward Island,) Port Stanley, Clifton, Pictou, Winnipeg, Maha, Kingston, (Canada,) Prescott, Port Sarnia, Quebec, Saint John's, (Canada,) Barbadoes, Bermuda, Fort Erie, Goderich, (Canada West,) Windsor, (Canada West.)

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I move to insert "Antigua" at the end of line 167.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Missouri. I will hear what the gentleman has to say but will reserve the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. The honorable gentleman from Mississippi in charge of the bill kindly consents to reserve the point of order until I have made a statement in reference to this amendment. I will first yield for a moment to my friend from Ohio, [Mr. MONROE.]

Mr. MONROE. As the gentleman yields to me a moment I will make an explanation in justice to him. This proposition which he now offers to the committee was submitted to me by the gentleman from Wisconsin with a written letter I believe from the Secretary of State. It had been my intention to call the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to it, but somehow it got overlooked, and hence I failed to do it. I will say this simply in justice to the gentleman who faithfully attended to the discharge of his duty in the case. It was my mistake in overlooking it.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I am obliged to my friend from Ohio for the explanation so kindly rendered. Of course, Mr. Chairman, if the point of order is insisted on, this amendment must be ruled out here in Committee of the Whole. I desire to say, however, that the consul at Antigua, Chester E. Jackson, is from my State and district. He is a naturalist, and in a certain sense an enthusiast; but, with this, he was a most diligent and efficient business man. When he was appointed Antigua was raised from a consular agency to a consulate, but the fees amounted, I think, to less than $300 per annum. It was said at the State Department if he wanted to fight bugs and fever Antigua was the place for him. He accepted without a moment's hesitation, and has shown an energy and efficiency seldom excelled. It appears from the records of customs that in 1873-74 not a pound of sugar was exported from Antigua to the United States. In 1879, up to the month of November, the exports amounted to $312,628.10, nearly all paid for sugars. The total exports of the island amounted to $1,300,000, and the exports from the United States to Antigua to $400,000. So, sir, here was a trade built up by the efficient action of this man amounting altogether to nearly $2,000,000. When he went there, as I have said, the fees were less than $300, while they now amount to a little less than $500. But of course he cannot live on any such sum as that. The question is, whether we will pay him $1,500 to supervise a business which he has built up, as these facts prove, amounting to nearly $2,000,000, and for which in any private business he would receive an adequate compensation. The letter from the Secretary of State, which I shall ask to have read as a part of my remarks, was sent to Senator GORDON, chairman of the Committee on Commerce in the Senate, with a view of having introduced there a bill making provision for the object I now seek; but as that bill would ultimately have to come before the Committee on Appropriations of the House it was deemed best to refer it here. I ask that the letter be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 23, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that, with a view to foster and develop the growing trade between the United States and the island of Antigua, in the British West Indies, it is deemed advisable to place the consulate at that port on a better footing than that which at present surrounds it. The office is now barely in receipt of $500 per annum in fees, as compensation to the incumbent of it. The following reasons suggest themselves in support of the recommendation. It appears by the records of the customs at Antigua that in the years 1873 and 1874 not a pound of sugar was exported from that point to the United States, while in the year 1879, to the month of November, the exportations amounted to the sum of $312,628.10, nearly all of which was paid for sugars. The total exports of the island amounted to $1,300,000, and the exports from the United States to Antigua for the same period amounted to nearly $400,000.

Adjacent to Antigua, which is the capital of the Leeward Islands and residence of the governor, are the islands of Montserrat, Nevis, Anguilla, and Tortola; and Dominica, more distant, but also under the jurisdiction of the government of Great Britain. Their products are cocoa, cotton, tobacco, timber trees, and cabinet wood, and this trade is gradually turning to the United States. The means of communication to these islands from Antigua is by mail steamer, weekly, and frequently by a government steamer, in which the governor visits the different islands and in which the general public are permitted to travel at low rates. The steamers of the Bermuda and West India line ply regularly between New York and Antigua.

Mr. Chester E. Jackson, the incumbent of the office at present, possesses great diligence and energy, and the notable increase in the trade adverted to is to be attributed mainly to his efforts.

It is conceived that, under these circumstances, a salary should be attached to the office, and I have the honor to suggest that the sum of $1,500 per annum be appropriated for the purpose.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

WM. M. EVARTS.

To Hon. JOHN B. GORDON,
Chairman of the Committee on Commerce, Senate.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I repeat, here is a man who may be said to have built up almost by his own exertions a trade between this country and Antigua amounting to nearly $2,000,000 per annum, and with every prospect of increasing if not doubling it, and the simple question is, whether we shall encourage him, I will not say reward him for his fidelity and efficiency, by giving him $1,500 a year, barely enough for subsistence, or whether we will starve him out and bring him home, and abandon all attempts to develop trade at that consulate? Which is the most enlightened method of extending American commerce? If other consuls are inefficient, this one is not.

Mr. MONROE. I rise to oppose the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to make an explanation of my position as a member of the sub-committee which prepared the bill, and of the general committee, in regard to questions of this kind. Personally I have a great deal of sympathy with a proposition like that which was offered by my colleague from Ohio, [Mr. NEAL.] I have a great deal of sympathy with a proposition like this which is offered by my friend from Wisconsin, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] and if I could have introduced this bill in just the form to suit myself I should have made it at several points considerably more liberal both for the consular and the diplomatic service than it is. But most of us have been here long enough to know that in order to pass bills through the committees and through the House there must be some mutual concession, and that is what has happened in the sub-committee to which this subject was assigned, and also in the general Committee on Appropriations. Out of respect to the opinions of others I have consented that several points should stand as they are where I should like to have had larger appropriations. Again, gentlemen on that committee made some concession in favor of liberality who would have been glad to cut down appropriations more than they are. The result is we have a bill which I think was the best the committee could agree upon. It is a good, fair bill, and as one who has some knowledge of it, and of the discussions which preceded it, and of the interviews with the Secretary of State in regard to it, it is my judgment we are not likely to get anything better on the whole for the service of the country than this bill; and hence, Mr. Chairman, I shall not only vote against propositions to strike out appropriations from the bill, but I shall also vote against amendments to increase appropriations.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I insist upon my point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. As it is now nearly five o'clock, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CONVERSE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3035) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. MARTIN, of North Carolina, to the 15th of April, on account of important business;

To Mr. WELLS, for eight days; and

To Mr. CHITTENDEN, for the remainder of the week.

H. B. CROSBY.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BELFORD asks leave to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of H. B. Crosby; no adverse report.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, in response to a resolution of the House relative to certain pensions under the act of March 9, 1878, which was referred by mistake to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, should have been referred to the Committee on Pensions. If there be no objection the change of reference will be made.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

NARCISSE GIBSON.

On motion of Mr. DAVIDSON, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 855) for the relief of Narcissa Gibson was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CENSUS BILL.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I have made arrangements with the gentleman on the other side opposing the census bill (S. No. 885) whereby there is to be a limited time allowed for debate; and I will state further, with the consent of the House, that we will call this bill up for consideration on Wednesday next immediately after the morning hour.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I did not hear the first part of the gentleman's statement, but I want a separate vote on the amendment to strike out the second section.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. That is a part of the agreement.

The SPEAKER. It is the gentleman's right to have a separate vote. If there be no further objection the bill will be set for consideration after the morning hour on Wednesday next.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE OUACHITA RIVER.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in response to a resolution of the House, transmitting a report of the appropriations for the past ten years for the improvement of the Ouachita River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

And then, on motion of Mr. SPARKS, (at four o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

By Mr. ANDERSON: The petition of citizens of Saline County,

Kansas, for an appropriation of $6,000 for the widow of C. C. Shaw, who was accidentally killed by a stroke of the pole of a United States mail-coach—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BLACKBURN: Papers relating to the claim of Benjamin Gratz, for property taken, used, and destroyed by the United States Army during the late war—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of the Kentucky Press Association, that materials used in making paper be placed on the free list, and for a reduction of the duty on printing-paper—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BOWMAN: The petition of Porter M., Albert H., and Gordon C. Smart, for compensation for property taken and destroyed by depredating Ute Indians—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BRIGGS: The petition of Sarah C. Ayer, to be placed on the pension-roll—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CAMP: Five petitions of citizens of New York, that Congress enact such laws as will alleviate the oppressions imposed upon the people by the transportation monopolies that now control the interstate commerce of the country—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. COFFROTH: The petition of 1,600 persons residing in Altoona, Pennsylvania, for the passage of a bill establishing a public building in Altoona, Pennsylvania—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LOGAN. To the Committee on Military Affairs was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 74) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish tents, &c., to the Grand Army of the Republic in the State of Wisconsin. Having inquired at the Quartermaster's Department and ascertained the fact that there are no tents that can be furnished, and that it would involve an appropriation of money for the purpose of furnishing them, the committee, although hesitating in reference to the matter, have directed me to report adversely to the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. My attention was distracted at the moment, and I did not observe the reasons the Senator from Illinois assigned for the adverse report.

Mr. LOGAN. I will state the reasons. The Quartermaster-General states that he has no tents or equipage of any character to be applied to this purpose; that they not only have no surplus, but, in fact, they have not a sufficiency for their own wants at this time, and if the joint resolution should be adopted there would have to go with it an appropriation of money for the purpose of purchasing tents and equipage for the purpose named. The Committee thought Congress would not be willing to do that, and therefore reported adversely to the joint resolution.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I ask that the joint resolution be placed on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was recommended the bill (S. No. 390) to authorize the President to restore Dunbar R. Ransom to his former rank in the Army, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 71) directing restoration of the official letter-books of the executive department of the State of North Carolina, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 74) for the relief of Lieutenant Frank P. Gross, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WALLACE, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2508) to regulate the compensation of night inspectors of customs, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

No. 1550) to amend section 4820 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to the Soldiers' Home.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1135) authorizing the Secretary of War to adjust and settle the account for arms between the State of South Carolina and the Government of the United States, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. KELLOGG, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 545) granting a pension to Elizabeth H. Pierce, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT SINKING FUND.

Mr. HARRIS. The report of the Treasurer of the United States in relation to the sinking fund of the District of Columbia, which was some time since referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, was by the committee referred to the commissioners of the District for such information as they could give and such recommendations as they might see fit to make in respect to the matter. I have the answer of the commissioners, which I desire to have printed for the use of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication will be received and the order to print entered.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1560) authorizing the President to prescribe suit-

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. PRYOR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 1425) to appropriate money for the continuance of improvement in the Susquehanna River; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

MISSISSIPPI VALLEY AND BRAZIL STEAMSHIP LINE.

Mr. COCKRELL. By inadvertence Senate bill No. 1547, which was introduced by me yesterday morning, was referred to the Committee on Commerce. It should have gone to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. I ask that the reference be changed.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is "a bill to provide for the opening of direct trade between the States of the Mississippi Valley and Brazil via the West Indies, and to authorize and establish a steamship mail service and express thereto." It belongs to the Post-Office Committee.

Mr. McMILLAN. What is the nature of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce, when it should have been referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think the bill goes to the Committee on Commerce properly. I think it relates to commerce.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think the Senator understands anything about it, or he would not make that suggestion. It is a bill to establish mail facilities between the United States and Brazil, and it belongs to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. McMILLAN. I only understand what the Senator from Missouri has said about it; and if his statement is correct I think the bill was properly referred to the Committee on Commerce. It relates to commerce between the States and it relates to commerce between this country and a foreign country. The matter has been before the Committee on Commerce, if I am not mistaken about it, at least in part, and I think the proper reference is to the Committee on Commerce, although the Senator from Missouri may think he understands all about it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I say that the bill belongs properly and legitimately to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. It is a subject-matter which that committee has time and again considered, and from which committee a report was made in the Forty-fifth Congress. It does not necessarily affect the commercial relations between the United States and the empire of Brazil, except as incidental to the establishment of mail service and the creation of a mail route, and following that it is expected that commercial relations will be established.

Mr. ALLISON. Incidentally?

Mr. COCKRELL. Only incidentally to it. I have no interest in this bill at all, not a particle; I introduced it yesterday, and stated so; but it is proper that it should go to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. That was the intention at the time it was introduced, but the whole title of the bill not being on the back of it the bill was inadvertently referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McMILLAN. It struck me from the statement of the Senator from Missouri and from the title of the bill that the incident was altogether in a different direction from that stated by him. It seemed to me that the incident was the mail service and that the purpose of the bill was for the improvement of the commerce of the country. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if this matter has not been before the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. COCKRELL. Not that ever I heard of. I have never heard of this question being before the Committee on Commerce, and if it was they have kept it in the committee and never brought it before the Senate.

Mr. McMILLAN. The chairman of the Committee on Commerce is not here. The Senator may understand the condition of the business before the Committee on Commerce, I suppose, as he understands all about this bill. He seems to understand about everything connected with this matter. It seems to me from the title of the bill and from the provisions of the bill as stated by the Senator that it was properly referred to the Committee on Commerce, and that the postal part of it is a mere incident.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. McMILLAN. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri move that the reference be changed?

Mr. COCKRELL. I move, as a matter of course, that the bill be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri moves that the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce be reconsidered, and then that the bill be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CONKLING. I venture to ask that the first section of the bill be reported so that we may see what we are asked to refer to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The Secretary proceeded to read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of opening a direct trade between the States of the Mississippi Valley and Brazil, via the West Indies, and of establishing a semi-monthly steamship mail service and express from the port of New Orleans to certain ports in Brazil and the West Indies, the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby—

Mr. CONKLING. That is enough for my purpose. I asked to have that portion of the bill read as I had not read it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have not read it myself, as I announced to the Senate distinctly yesterday.

Mr. CONKLING. That would explain sufficiently the remark of the honorable Senator, whom I am so much in the habit of following. When he stated that this was a post-route bill, not touching commerce except incidentally, it seemed to me that he made a statement which it would be very difficult to answer; but inasmuch as the forefront of the bill is to establish trade with the countries referred to there, I think that the Senator explains himself in his prior remark when he says that he had not read the bill. I must say that it seems to me the chief object of this proposition is, as it states, to establish trade with the foreign country named, and, if so, the direction which the Senate has given the bill is correct.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator has only heard part of the first section read. I only know what the gentleman told me who prepared the bill and at whose request I introduced it yesterday morning and stated the facts to the Senate. It is for the Postmaster-General to do this whole thing; and the first section shows that. Let the first section be read again, and let it be completed. It will show that the whole matter is in the hands of the Post-Office Department, and whatever is asked for is to be done by the Post-Office Department.

Mr. CONKLING. Before it is read I wish to remind the Senator that every bill I ever heard of on this subject which proposes that mails shall go on a steamer contains the same provision, that the Postmaster-General shall make the contract in that respect, for there is no other officer to do it. The bill, the Senator will remember, which was known as a bill in behalf of the company represented by Mr. Roach, contained the same provision, and so they all do, I think.

Mr. COCKRELL. That bill came from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; it was referred to it in the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses, and acted upon by that committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first section of the bill will be read at the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of opening a direct trade between the States of the Mississippi Valley and Brazil, via the West Indies, and of establishing a semi-monthly steamship mail service and express from the port of New Orleans to certain ports in Brazil and the West Indies, the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to contract with the Mississippi Valley and Brazil Steamship Company, of Saint Louis, State of Missouri, for a semi-monthly steamship mail service from the port of New Orleans to the ports of Havana, Kingston, (Jamaica,) Port Spain, (Trinidad,) in the West Indies, and to the ports of Para, Maranhão, Pernambuco, Bahia, and Rio de Janeiro, in Brazil.

Mr. BECK. I should like to hear the whole bill read. It seems to me to be a commercial bill in every essential aspect of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be reported at length.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. HEREFORD. My friend from Missouri who introduced the bill seemed very confident that the Committee on Commerce had nothing to do with it; that it expressly, beyond any doubt, belonged to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; that there was no element in the bill which would carry it to the Committee on Commerce; that there was nothing in the bill which the Committee on Commerce had anything to do with; and that every portion of it belonged expressly to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. Now, when the bill comes to be read we ascertain that one portion of the bill provides that the steamship company shall pay no port dues whatever, &c. What has the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to do with that subject? I cannot see what they have to do with the question as to whether the steamship company shall pay fees for entering the various ports. It changes, or rather suspends, all the laws on that subject. Certainly the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads has nothing to do with that.

There is a part of the bill that should go to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and there certainly is just as clearly another portion of it that should go to the Committee on Commerce; and inasmuch as the bill is there I agree with the Senator from Minnesota, who is on the Committee on Commerce as well as myself, and I agree also with the Senator from New York, who is also on the Committee on Commerce, that the bill is as properly before the Committee on Commerce as it could be before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and therefore I think it ought to remain there.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, disguise it as we may, this is the old controversy whether we shall subsidize steamship lines to go to Brazil. The ten-year contracts that are to be authorized to be made by the Postmaster-General show that to be the fact, as well as the other provisions of the bill.

There are serious questions arising of course in the consideration of the bill, which have been discussed on the floor of the Senate before, all of which the Committee on Commerce alone can consider. For example, the argument was made before and will be made again, and it was made with great force—I remember that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE] made it, perhaps I did myself somewhat—that if you for ten years subsidize a particular line of ships, you thereby destroy all the other lines that have to run without subsidies. There is a large number of ships trading between Brazil and Baltimore and other ports of this country, all of which are expected to run without a subsidy; and if you for ten years give to a particular steamship line, under the pretense of carrying the mails, an advantage over them, it drives them from the sea. You are to release these ships from certain port dues which other ships trading to Brazil have to pay. These are all great commercial questions which you have to consider. While I care nothing about which one of the committees considers the bill, there is no disguising the fact that all the great commercial interests of this country in connection with Brazil necessarily come up in the consideration of the bill; and it is only a convenient way of obtaining a subsidy for this particular steamship line that the great privilege in extended terms is given to the Postmaster-General to give them something for carrying letters to foreign countries. We all know what the real purpose is. The grave questions involved in the bill are clearly commercial questions.

Mr. COCKRELL. As I stated yesterday, I introduced the bill by request. There was no occasion for its drawing upon its head, before it has been considered by any committee or by the Senate, the ire of the Senator from Minnesota and of my friend, the Senator from Kentucky. It is a proper question to be committed to the consideration of a committee of this body, and it is time enough to talk about subsidy and all that when the subject comes before the Senate. I stated that I was requested by a reputable gentleman to introduce the bill; that I did not indorse or sanction its provisions, for I had not read them, and that I did not commit myself against them. I stand precisely there this morning. I do not know that I shall favor or oppose the bill, but I do know that if there is any question on the face of the earth that belongs to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads it is the question involved in this bill. It belongs to that committee or it belongs to no committee at all.

The Senator from West Virginia refers to the matter of port fees. That can come properly before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads when it is in connection with the transportation and delivery of the mails. It would be more appropriately before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads than before the Committee on Commerce. Everything in the bill outside of the transportation of the mails is simply incident to that business.

As to whether these provisions are right or not, is an entirely different question and does not arise until the bill comes before the Senate for action. The bill is for the purpose of establishing mail communication between the United States and Brazil and to regulate incidental matters connected with it, such as the landing of vessels at the wharf at New Orleans, the transportation of merchandise in packages of a certain kind, and the conveyance of passengers in connection with the mails, all incident to the prime object of the bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. I certainly have not felt any excitement about this matter, and think I have exhibited none. The Senator from Missouri assumed to himself all the information in the Senate upon this subject, although it appears from a subsequent answer that he had not read the bill. From the title of the bill and from the statement of the Senator from Missouri I inferred that the bill was properly referred to the Committee on Commerce yesterday. I think so still. If the incidents in the bill, such as the establishment of mail routes, are in the interest of commerce, then certainly the bill should have gone to that committee, and I think it should remain there.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri, to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 9, noes 22; no quorum voting.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the Chair to state the question again. Probably attention was not called to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri to reconsider the vote by which the bill which has been read was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think if the Chair will take another division we shall get a quorum.

Mr. COCKRELL. I merely desire to state the fact that inadvertently yesterday morning when the bill was introduced it was referred at my suggestion to the Committee on Commerce, I intending to have it referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it is a postal question. The Post-Office Committee has always had it.

The motion to reconsider was not agreed to, there being on a division—ayes 17, noes 25.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 2518) for the relief of Nelson Lyon and Jeremiah S. James; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

LOAN OF FLAGS AT NASHVILLE.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that the joint resolution which has just come from the House of Representatives may be read for information and then that unanimous consent be given for its passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will lay the joint resolution before the Senate.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 268) authorizing the Secretary of War to lend United States flags to centennial commissioners at Nashville, Tennessee, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask that the joint resolution be read at length.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee asks that the joint resolution be considered at this time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that any resolution in respect of public property, although this is a very small affair, ought to go to a committee. The Senator will see that the joint resolution does not provide for how long the flags are to be lent, or when they shall be returned, or for what purpose, but it is apparently a permanent loan, at call to be sure, yet one that a committee ought to consider. It in and of itself is a very small matter, but we are constantly making precedents that are as constantly referred to as authority for broadening the scope of our dispositions. Therefore I think that this, like other bills, ought to go to a committee to be considered and reported upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ASSISTANT SENATE LIBRARIAN.

Mr. VANCE. I ask unanimous consent to call up for consideration—

Mr. COCKRELL. I call for the Calendar, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded. The Secretary will report the first bill on the Calendar of General Orders.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I wish to say to the Senator from Missouri that there is a motion to reconsider the resolution appointing an assistant librarian. I should like to have that disposed of.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am requested by the Senator from Georgia to call up the resolution, the reconsideration of which I moved the other day. I have no objection to taking it up and disposing of it at the present time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there unanimous consent that it be considered at this time?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. What is it?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the resolution which will be read by the Secretary.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint an assistant librarian for the Senate, who shall attend upon the floor of the Senate during its legislative sessions as directed by the Committee on the Library, at a salary of $1,440 per annum, payable monthly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri moves to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the resolution just read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understood the Senator to ask unanimous consent to take it up. I rather feel obliged to object and for this reason: I think the question of what can be done to provide books for reference more conveniently than they are now, ought to be considered by a committee, and I should hope that somebody would introduce a resolution directing the Committee on the Library to make that inquiry so that the Senate can be advised of what is possible before we finally pass on this resolution and therefore for the present I must object to its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The Secretary will call the first bill on the Calendar.

EQUALIZATION OF HOMESTEADS.

Mr. PADDOCK. Some days ago Senate bill No. 1085 went over without prejudice. Therefore it is entitled to be placed at the head of the Calendar. I think it will take but a very few moments to pass the bill, and I should like to have it taken up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the Senate consider out of order the following bill—

Mr. PADDOCK. Not out of order; it is in order. It went over without prejudice, and should be properly at the head of the Calendar.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (S. No. 1085) to equalize homesteads by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That will not do.

Mr. KERNAN. I must insist that the bill under consideration yesterday morning be proceeded with. It is hanging over, and was partly considered yesterday.

Mr. PADDOCK. That being the case I shall yield to the Senator from New York. I did not understand that to be the fact. While I am up, however, I wish to say that after the Committee on Public Lands had reported this bill it concluded to add two additional provisions to the bill. They now lie on the Secretary's desk. I move that the bill be reprinted as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION OF 1883.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senate bill No. 1160 is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1160) to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the treaty of peace and the recognition of American Independence by holding an international exhibition of arts, manufactures, and the products of the soil and mine, in the city of New York, in the State of New York, in the year 1883. The pending question was stated to be on an amendment of Mr. COCKRELL to strike out section 7 and insert in lieu thereof:

That the United States shall not in any manner or under any circumstances be liable for any of the acts, doings, proceedings, or representations of the said commission, its officers, agents, servants, or employees, or any of them, or for the services, salaries, labors, or wages of said officers, agents, servants, or employees, or any of them, or any subscription to the capital stock, or for any certificates of stock, bonds, mortgages, or obligations of any kind issued to aid the commission, or for any debts, liabilities, or expenses of any kind whatever attending such commission or exhibition, or accruing by reason of the same.

Mr. COCKRELL. The motion was to strike out the section named and insert the matter I moved at the close of the bill to meet the point of the Senator from Vermont, so that it shall be the last section of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question then is on striking out section 7.

The motion to strike out was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri to insert at the end of the bill the matter which has just been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Are there further amendments?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Have all the amendments reported by the Committee on Finance been disposed of?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They have been.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator from New York what the provision is in this bill for the expiration of this corporation. When are its functions to cease and determine?

Mr. KERNAN. The language of the bill is that the exhibition shall be held in 1883, and that the corporation shall continue until the exhibition has taken place.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator be good enough to read the clause on which he rests that statement?

Mr. KERNAN. My eye does not rest on it just now, and I state it from memory; but I will look to see if I can find it, [examining the bill.] It is in section 3.

That the said United States international commission is hereby created a body-corporate, and by that name shall have a corporate existence until the object for which it is formed shall have been accomplished.

And the first section states that that object is to have an international exhibition held in the city of New York in the year 1883. Again:

SEC. 17. That as soon as practicable after the said exhibition shall have been closed it shall be the duty of said corporation to convert its property into cash and, after the payment of all its liabilities, to divide its remaining assets among its stockholders, pro rata, in full satisfaction and discharge of its capital stock. And it shall be the duty then of the United States international commission to submit, in a report to the President of the United States, the financial results of the international exhibition.

That is section 17, on page 11.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That part of it I saw.

Mr. KERNAN. One thing further. I observe that section 18 provides—

That it shall be the duty of the United States international commission to make report, from time to time, to the President of the United States of the progress of the work, and, in a final report, present a full exhibit of the results of the United States international exhibition.

I think it clearly means until the exhibition shall have been held in 1883, and its affairs shall have been wound up, and the result reported.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I see in the first section, at the foot of page 1 of the printed bill, and at the top of page 2 this provision: "A corporation to be created by this act," which I suppose is intended to mean "is hereby created by this act."

In the city of New York, in the State of New York, in the year 1883, to be continued so long as shall be in its judgment advantageous, subject always to the supervision and under the auspices of the Government of the United States.

Now my query is, supposing this corporation to be formed and the exhibition to be had in 1883, how long after that time the corporation has a right to exist and carry on operations? Of course it cannot carry on operations with a view to an exhibition; but the winding-up operations, so to speak; the holding and disposing of the property that it shall have acquired in the mean time, and so forth, may go on for twenty years for aught that I can see in this bill to prevent it, and I suggest to the Senator that there ought to be somewhere in the bill a precise limit of day and date, as the expression is, beyond which the corporation should have no existence. It should then terminate, and all the functions then would be for the courts as a mere winding-up process; for as it is now, taking the first section and those that the Senator has read in connection, it appears to me that the legal effect would be entirely indefinite. It might be one year after the exhibition, it might be two years or ten or twenty. I think therefore there ought to be a precise provision which shall say that on the arrival of a certain day, say the 1st of January, 1884 if you please or the 1st of July, 1885, the corporate powers as such should cease, and the corporation should be dissolved. Then of course, as we all know, on the principles of law, after that if there is any property or anything left to be wound up and distributed, it becomes a matter of ordinary duty.

Mr. KERNAN. I have no objection to having it limited to a reasonable time. I only want to make a suggestion, and then I will see what the bill says. There is a little difficulty in fixing a date when this winding up arbitrarily must cease. This corporation is to have its exposition in 1883, and then its affairs must be wound up. You will observe that the language is:

An international exhibition of arts, manufactures, and products of the soil and mine, be held under the direction of the United States international commission, a corporation to be created by this act, in the city of New York, in the State of New York, in the year 1883.

And then the corporation is to continue to exist until the objects for which it is formed shall have been accomplished. I should like to put it a reasonable time for them to wind up their affairs, pay their debts, and dispose of their property. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] has a suggestion to make which I think will answer the purpose.

Mr. WALLACE. I suggest in section 17, line 2 of the section, after the word "closed" to insert "not later than the 1st day of January, 1885."

Mr. KERNAN. I think that would give time enough.

Mr. WALLACE. Does the Senator from Vermont hear the suggestion?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, I think it would be safer to add to the first section.

Mr. KERNAN. The incorporating section is section 3.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think on the whole a section at the end will be better. At any rate, I will make this motion first: In the first section beginning after the word "advantageous" in the tenth and eleventh lines I move to insert "subject to the provisions hereinafter contained and."

Mr. KERNAN. I see no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. CARPENTER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New York having this bill in charge, what clause of the Constitution authorizes Congress to pass this bill? The disguise was resorted to in the case of the National Educational Association the other day, of giving the corporation a habitat in the District of Columbia; but it is dropped here and we are creating a corporation to perform certain duties in the city and State of New York, not in the District of Columbia at all. I want to know what provision of the Constitution authorizes us to create a corporation whose duties are to be confined to the State of New York and for this special purpose?

Mr. KERNAN. I will state with great respect to the Senator from Wisconsin that I am anxious that the Senate should dispose of this bill. If as good a lawyer as he has difficulties about the constitutional power to pass the bill I do not think I can satisfy him. I stated yesterday that I thought there was sufficient power in the Constitution to make the necessary laws to allow an international exhibition of arts and manufactures to be held, and I do not desire to argue it.

Mr. CARPENTER. I think the Senator from New York is very discreet in not arguing it. If he wants me to vote for this bill without knowing that I violate the Constitution, he had better say nothing about it.

Mr. KERNAN. I do not know that in five minutes I could satisfy my friend if he has any difficulty.

Mr. CARPENTER. I do not think the Senator could satisfy me if he was not limited to five minutes. I do not think the thing can be done.

Now, my objection to this bill is simply this: we are going on here day by day under a written Constitution, violating its provisions, until we get so accustomed to it that no man wants to take the trouble of explaining the necessity for it or the propriety of it; and, limited to five minutes, the Senator from New York frankly confesses that he cannot do it.

This is a very small matter, but still it is a violation of the Constitution and it is debauching the public mind of the country, it is debauching the conscience of the Senate, and ought not to be done. Five minutes is enough time to point out any clause of the Constitution authorizing this bill, if there is any; but everybody knows there is none whatever.

I see we have a bill on the Calendar, which will be reached in a day or so, authorizing the calling of a medical conference in the United States. I suppose we shall have a legal professional conference called by and by, and so on. In other words I do not see what there is under the practice here now from day to day, that is not within our power. I do not question that Congress might by main strength appropriate money to such a thing as this; but I do deny that it can create a corporation to do any such thing, and besides that the Senate in committee has already adopted an amendment that the United States shall not be responsible for anything about it. After that in what sense are these words used here that this thing is to be "subject always to the supervision and under the auspices of the Government of the United States?" "The auspices of the Government of the United States" seem to be that we shall not have anything to do with it or be responsible for it, but having nothing to do with it, having no control over it, we will create a corporation to do it. Now, I want to know what authority there is to do it?

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. President, the best answer to the Senator from Wisconsin is that we have exercised this power, the very power that is here proposed to be exercised, in the creation of the corporation which conducted the exhibition in the city of Philadelphia in 1876, and large amounts of money were expended and collected thereunder, and the exhibition was conducted to a successful close, and this country and foreign nations obtained great advantages therefrom. I do not think the citizens of the United States would find fault in any way if the exercise of the powers here granted should be placed under the clause in reference to commerce, if it exists nowhere else, because it certainly tends to the extending of the commerce of this country. But the fact exists nevertheless, and cannot be gainsaid, that the Congress of the United States has exercised in almost the precise language found in this bill the very power proposed to be exerted here. It is true that as good a constitutional lawyer as the Senator from Wisconsin may be able to criticize and draw fine distinctions, and perhaps make a good speech to show that there is not a technical power within the language of the Constitution to do this thing, and yet I reply to him that it has been done, and the results have been good, and the country recognizes the fact that those results have been good. I think the commercial metropolis of the nation ought to be intrusted with the conduct of another of these exhibitions under the power of the Government of the United States.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, I am astonished by these democrats more and more every day. I had always believed that there was one sound element in them; that was, they were for a reasonably strict construction of the Constitution. If they give that up, there is no democratic party. That was the only innocent article of their faith, the only one that I should know how to defend if I were retained with a fee in my pocket to do it. Now it seems they are trying to get away from that, and I invoke the aid of our independent party here from Illinois [laughter] to stand up and call them back to the line of duty.

The Senator from Pennsylvania says he may not be able to satisfy me that this is technically within the Constitution. If it is not technically within the Constitution, how is it within the Constitution at all? There is no slipshod provision there that will cover whatever the people want to have done by us. On the contrary, the powers of this Government are specific. The preamble recites the object of making the Constitution. That Constitution gives certain specific powers to the three branches of the Government, and the tenth amendment provides that all the powers not granted to the United States by the Constitution are reserved to the States or the people respectively. If there is not some provision in the Constitution which justifies this bill, we have no right to pass it. If an ingenious lawyer like the Senator from Pennsylvania cannot satisfy himself that there is, if he is willing to concede that technically it is not there, then I assert that it is not there at all.

He says it might be under the power to regulate commerce. How can this be regarded as a regulation of commerce? Congress cannot create commerce. That is not the power given to us at all. That is left to the enterprise of our people under the supervision of the States. Congress cannot go to work to raise wheat to become the subject of commerce. Congress cannot go into the mining business. It can regulate commerce. But what is commerce? Commerce is the trade between different communities or between different States; under our power trade between different nations and between the several States. The only power we have got is to regulate that trade.

Was there ever any man so latitudinous in his construction of the Constitution that he would claim that the power to regulate commerce authorized us to do it by means of a corporation to get up a spree in New York over the great treaty of peace? Such a proposition only shows, as the Senator is aware, that this thing is outside of our constitutional power.

He says the people all like it, children cry for it. Well, I do not know but that they do. He says it is clear that we have done this thing more than once, and there is our authority for doing it again. What logic is that from a lawyer, and the Senator from Pennsylvania is a lawyer and a good lawyer? A wrong done to-day becomes authority for repeating it to-morrow; a violation of the Constitution one year justifies its violation the next! That is the logic. Apply it to other crimes—and this is a crime, if it is not authorized by the Constitution, and nobody seems to think it is; it is a crime to pass it without authority. Take the crime of murder. Murder has been committed all over this country from time immemorial. Does that make it right? Does that justify it? Would that be a good plea in bar to an indictment for murder? That is the logic. We have done these wrongs; therefore we have acquired a right to do them; and we are going to do them now because we have done them! If the Senators on the other side of the House who specially have charge of the Constitution—for the last fifteen years they have not pretended to have charge of anything else; they would let the country go to pot, but they stood by the Constitution—if now they have given that up, if they are going to let both drop together, I want to put in a protest to save the Constitution.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I am very happy to see that my friend from Wisconsin is abandoning that party which has camped outside of the Constitution for the last twenty years and is coming back to the old democratic fold again. I think he is entirely right in this matter. I thought so when that other show was got up in Philadelphia. I think so now. I see no clause in the Constitution which will enable me to vote for this show. If the State of New York, which has great wealth and great power, will incorporate these very respectable gentlemen into a society for the purpose of this show in New York, I shall be very glad, and I have no doubt my people in Connecticut will be glad to join with them and be very much rejoiced in having such a convention; but for one I am with my friend from Wisconsin. I am very glad that he stands shoulder to shoulder with me and has quit that camping-ground where he has been for so many years. I welcome him back to the old democratic fold. We shall frequently hear from him words of good counsel and wise advice.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, I never did camp outside of the Constitution. I never defended anything that was outside of the Constitution. I never justified the exercise of any power on the part of this Government that I believed to be outside of the Constitution. I never shall. And if I have returned to the democratic tent, it is only after the democrats have this morning publicly proclaimed that they have folded their tent; there is no democratic tent any more. [Laughter.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To complete that branch of the subject, Mr. President, I move to add at the end of the printed bill, but preceding the section agreed to on motion of the Senator from Missouri, the following words to come in as a new section:

The corporation hereby authorized shall exist no longer than until the 1st day of January, 1885.

They can wind it up as much earlier as they like under the preceding provisions of the bill.

Mr. KERNAN. No objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The committee has forgotten, as it appears to me, to add the usual clause in all corporations nowadays, and that shall turn out to be too strong for the creating power, for repeal, alteration, and amendment; and in view of that I move this section to come in at the end of the whole bill, amendments and all, as the very last section of the bill:

Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act as in its judgment the public good shall require.

Mr. KERNAN. I think there is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There are one or two other things about this bill that I should like to call attention to. There is one merely phraseological statement on page 5, at the end of section 8 in an amendment that has already been agreed to, that I desire to call attention to.

He [the President of the United States] shall communicate to the diplomatic representatives of all nations, copies of the same.

That is, of regulations and provisions and so on.

Together with such regulations as may be adopted by the commission, for publication in their respective countries, and shall in behalf of the Government and people commend the exhibition to all foreign nations, who may be pleased to take part therein.

This is the first time I have ever heard that phrase used in a law about anybody's being pleased or otherwise. The law generally is not made to please anybody, but to command somebody; and therefore I suggest as a mere matter of taste, to strike out the words "be pleased" and insert "choose," so as to read:

Who may choose to take part therein.

Mr. WALLACE. The phraseology was copied from the proclamation of the President in regard to the other exhibition, to avoid all question on that subject. It is simply a repetition of the words of the President's proclamation in regard to the former exhibition embodied here in order to avoid any question of difficulty as to the liability of the Government by a formal invitation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I can readily understand the propriety of that language in a diplomatic proclamation, which is one thing; but to speak in a law about people being pleased or otherwise, it appears to me is not in very good taste. While the proclamation of the President would be perfectly correct in speaking to the representatives of foreign governments as inviting such as may be pleased to attend and so on, it appears to me it is not the thing to say in a law; but it is a mere matter of taste that I do not wish to say anything about.

Mr. KERNAN. I have no objection to the change of "be pleased" to "choose."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then section 9 provides:

That the said commission shall have authority, and is hereby empowered, to receive subscriptions of capital stock to an amount not exceeding $12,000,000, to be divided into shares of $10 each, and to issue to the subscribers of the stock certificates therefor, &c.

There is no provision that I am able to see in the bill that requires anybody who subscribes to pay in a single cent on his subscription. The only instance in which the matter of money paid in on subscriptions is referred to at all, is where the authority to mortgage is given. There is given an authority to mortgage to an extent equal only to the amount of capital stock actually paid in. Now, in all the States and well-ordered communities that ever I heard of, if you create a corporation that is to have a capital, you require in order to give it something more than a paper existence that whatever of capital stock is authorized and subscribed for shall be paid in, or a certain proportion of it from time to time, so that you have got a corporation with a capital stock.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me to call his attention to the provision of section 11. There it is provided that before any election can be held:

Each subscriber shall be entitled to a vote for each share subscribed for, on which at least 10 per cent. in cash shall have been previously paid under such regulations as may be prescribed by said commission.

A subscriber cannot vote unless he shall have paid in 10 per cent. on his subscription; so the implication is very plain that only those who shall have paid the 10 per cent. are members of the corporation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That I understand perfectly, but that only applies to the elective franchise, so to speak, of the people who have subscribed. Consequently you may get up a corporation here; the shares being $10 you may get one hundred subscribers of one share each, which will produce under the eleventh section before they can vote $1,000. Your corporation therefore may launch itself and start with $1,000 of capital stock paid in. I am opposed to that. I insist upon it, just as I should if I were in a State Legislature, that this corporation if it is to be created at all, shall be created on a substance of capital that is actually paid up to meet the obvious necessities of the corporation. The eleventh section is only a limitation on the right to vote, and nobody can vote who has not paid in 10 per cent. of his stock, but the corporation may still be organized with only $1,000 of capital stock actually paid in.

Mr. WALLACE. But it could get no further than getting out bonds to the amount of another thousand dollars.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know that; but it might draw ever so many people into this exhibition and disappoint them. There is the trouble about that.

Mr. WALLACE. What suggestion does the Senator make?

Mr. EDMUNDS. My suggestion is this: In section 9, line 4, after the word "each" to insert: "which shall be paid in at the time of subscription," so that everybody who subscribes for a share of $10 shall pay in his $10 to the commissioners of subscription or whoever the proper persons are, in order that the corporation, as far as it gradually gets existence by subscriptions, shall get it by the actual and earnest deposit of the money that the subscription represents. That is the object, and I make the motion.

Mr. BAYARD. Let me suggest to the honorable Senator from Vermont whether it will not be sufficient to provide that this $10, the cost of each share of capital stock, shall be paid in when called for by the commissioners. If you compel the payment of the whole of the stock at the time of subscription, it certainly would be very unusual. You have already provided that they shall not act at all until there has been a cash payment of 10 per cent. of the subscription. It is not usual to compel the payment of the whole stock at the time of subscription, but simply to provide that as the calls are made the payments shall be made in cash. That will reach the object which the Senator has, and it seems to me would be wiser than to require in anticipation the whole amount of money subscribed to be paid in. The total amount required cannot be told until the amount of subscriptions and the cost of the undertaking shall be better ascertained. It was the intention of the committee, I know, to provide against the very danger which the Senator has pointed out, which is that there should be a fictitious company created without the payment of money. Therefore in section 11 it is provided that 10 per cent. should be paid in money before any proceeding for organization should be had. Then in section 15 it is provided that it cannot borrow money on bonds except in proportion to the amount actually paid in on the capital stock.

Now, if the Senator desires that the calls, after the 10 per cent. shall have been paid, shall be responded to in money only, I submit to him that it would be just and right to require the payments to be made as called for, and not to say that the whole shall be paid at the time of the first subscription.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is a great deal of force in what the Senator from Delaware suggests; but the ordinary practice that he alludes to in creating corporations in the States, where those subjects are carefully considered, while it is as he states is also to have the charter always contain a provision that the corporation shall incur no debt or liability of any kind beyond the amount of its capital stock, actually paid in; and therefore if a corporation thus created incurs through the vote of its directors a liability beyond that, the charter also provides that the directors assenting thereto shall be personally liable; but there is no such limitation or safeguard in this bill. It only provides that they shall not issue bonds to borrow money in excess of the amount of capital stock paid in. They may buy all the lumber of New York lumber merchants, and all the stone and whatever is necessary to erect the buildings; they may hire the grounds; they may do all the things that involve people in the enterprise, which may turn out to be an entire failure after all and fall through, without any security at all. And when we look at the fact, which is really the primal foundation of this whole bill, that a charter granted by Congress is in the eyes of the people of the United States and of all other civilized nations a kind of moral guarantee that the thing is on a firm and solid foundation and that nobody is to be entrapped or led into a loss by it, it appears to me that there is great force in the suggestion that when we are putting out this moral guarantee of absolute responsibility and respectability there should be something on which it should rest. I say the ordinary provision in State charters of business corporations is the liability of assenting directors to creating any debt in excess of the capital stock actually paid in and a prohibition of their doing it; and the absence of that here and the mere provision that this corporation shall not borrow money on bonds beyond the capital stock paid in is entirely inadequate to the general purpose and policy that careful legislators are called upon to exercise.

Instead of requiring all this to be paid in at once on the subscription—though I do not think that would be very hard if this is to be a real enterprise that we are to be morally responsible for—I should not object to a distinct provision somewhere inserted in the bill that this corporation should not proceed in the enterprise that it is devoted to till a certain gross amount, whatever it may be, supposed to be necessary for the success of the undertaking, should be paid in to its capital stock in cash and not withdrawn, together with an equal amount of bonds that they might borrow upon that. That would do; but I have not had time to prepare an amendment of that kind, because it requires a great many words, quite a long section making that provision. That perhaps would be better than what I have suggested; but I have taken the readiest means I can to call the attention of the Senate first to its moral responsibility for this business, and second to what appears to me, with great respect, to be the present inadequate provisions of the charter as it is proposed upon the subject.

Mr. ALLISON. The bill will go over until to-morrow necessarily, and I think the Senator from Vermont can prepare an amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not bound to prepare everything.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, in line 4, section 9, after the word "each," to insert "which shall be paid in at the time of subscription."

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask to have read for information the amendment I have sent to the table to see if it does not meet the views of the Senator from Vermont?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Delaware will be read for information as a substitute for that of the Senator from Vermont.

The Chief Clerk read the proposed amendment of Mr. BAYARD, as follows:

Which shall be paid in money at the several times when the calls therefor shall be respectively made by the said commissioners.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would not satisfy me because it leaves it entirely to the directors to determine whether they will have any capital stock at all except 10 per cent. which may be $1,000, all told, on the formation of the corporation. It needs something more adequate than that, I submit with great respect to the Senator, but no doubt it can be provided for without difficulty.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired, and the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. KERNAN. I would ask whether we may not proceed with this bill and get a vote?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there unanimous consent that the bill which has been under debate be further considered at this time?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it will be better to give a little time in order that the Senators in charge may frame a provision that undoubtedly will be entirely satisfactory to them about the liability of this corporation.

Mr. KERNAN. Very well; let it go over until to-morrow morning.

THE POTOMAC FISHERIES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is the Geneva award bill.

Mr. VANCE. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate again to take up the bill (H. R. No. 4568) for the protection of the Potomac fisheries in the District of Columbia, and for the preservation of shad and herring in the Potomac River. If it is not passed at once, the season when the bill will operate will have passed away.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider House bill No. 4568.

The bill was read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have the impression that the Senator from North Carolina has one amendment that has been suggested to him which he desires to make in order to make this provision conform in respect to the possession of the prohibited classes of fish with the laws of Virginia and Maryland so close upon the river, so that there will not be an inconsistency in the immediately contiguous provisions.

Mr. VANCE. Professor Baird suggested that the date be changed to make it conform with the laws of Maryland, which extend the fishing season to the 10th of June. This closes it on the 30th of May. The committee have no objection to that amendment being inserted except that it sends the bill back to the House, and the season is passing so rapidly that by returning the bill we fear it may become inoperative before it becomes a law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The suggestion of the Commissioner of Fisheries I think relates to section 4. I believe that he is entirely satisfied with the wisdom of section 2, as to catching fish; but in respect to having fish in possession after the 30th of May, inasmuch as, by the laws of Virginia and Maryland they may be had in possession until the 10th of June, it would create extreme difficulty and inconvenience to members of Congress who stay here in Washington after that time if they cannot eat shad that are caught near Alexandria, conformably to the laws of Virginia.

Mr. VANCE. That would be an official inconvenience, it is true. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. A great personal inconvenience to those who like the southern shad; and it does not affect the closing of the season for catching, so that I will take the liberty of moving in section 4 to strike out the words "thirtieth day of May" and insert the words "tenth day of June."

Mr. VANCE. I am willing to accept the amendment for the committee if I have authority to do it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

IMPROVEMENT OF SUSQUEHANNA RIVER.

Mr. WALLACE. I now ask the Senate to take up a bill of the same character precisely as the one just passed, which is necessary to be passed at this time, the bill (S. No. 1425) to appropriate money for the continuance of improvement in the Susquehanna River.

Mr. BLAINE. This is all by unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is. Is there objection to considering at this time the bill named by the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BAILEY. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLAINE. I hope my friend from Connecticut will permit the honorable Senator from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] to proceed with his remarks on the Geneva award bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I intended to take the floor on the subject of the Geneva award, but I do not care about antagonizing bills. If that bill is postponed until to-morrow I can make my remarks then.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Better make them now.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDONALD] wants to speak also.

Mr. BLAINE. I beg to say to the honorable Senator from Illinois that the bill which the honorable Senator from Connecticut is now calling up is a bill which will lead to a political debate inevitably, and I do hope that the Geneva award bill will be permitted to go through as the regular business and not be thrown out of its order.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I have no charge of the bill, but I am perfectly willing to proceed at any time.

Mr. BLAINE. The honorable Senator from Illinois is ready with his speech. I will unite with my friend from Connecticut in all proper expedition of the appropriation bills.

Mr. EATON. I have no objection to giving way to the Senator from Illinois to make a speech.

Mr. BLAINE. As soon as the honorable Senator from Illinois is through the Senator from Connecticut will have the floor for his bill.

Mr. EATON. Very well.

Mr. ALLISON. I submit to the Senator from Maine that it will make very little difference whether the Senator from Illinois takes the floor to-day or to-morrow, because it is perfectly certain that the Geneva award matter cannot be disposed of to-day.

Mr. BLAINE. Very well; but I will show the difference in a moment. The honorable Senator from Indiana is out to-day I believe preparing a speech and he expects to make an elaborate speech upon it—

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mine will be a short one.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator from Illinois does not wish to speak at the tail end of the day.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Senator from Indiana and I can both get through to-morrow, without trouble.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest that to-morrow the Ute bill will necessarily come up, so that this Geneva award bill must be laid aside temporarily. I think it might as well be laid aside now, and the appropriation proceeded with.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, while the order of business is being discussed, I desire to state that early in the session I introduced a resolution on the finances which was laid on the table at my request. I propose to ask the indulgence of the Senate on some day soon to call it up. I would say the day after to-morrow, but in view of what has been said here I will name Tuesday of next week, when, if I can do so without interfering with anybody else, I give notice that I shall call up the resolution for the purpose of submitting some remarks upon it.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. If the Geneva award bill is called up, I will take the floor and waive it for the Senator from Indiana, or will make my remarks, as the Senate shall prefer.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That bill is now before the Senate as the unfinished business.

Mr. VOORHEES. Is there objection to my notice?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely wish to say that I think in the present condition of the business of Congress, the consideration and discussion of abstract resolutions about the best financial policy of the United States is quite out of place until we shall have done something in the way of passing the necessary laws like the Geneva award bill (or not passing it, disposing of it,) the appropriation bills, and a great number of other things upon the Calendar. Therefore, for one, if the Senator will pardon me, I must be excused from giving anything like an assent to the taking up of these resolutions for any present purpose that I can see. If after we have done the business that we are called upon to do and that it is necessary we should do, there is then time for the discussion of all the conundrums that the financial problem involves, I shall be very glad to hear the Senator from Indiana and shall be very glad to have him hear me or somebody else.

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not doubt—it is not proper in me to doubt—the good faith of the Senator. If I could do so I should not say that I believe he would take pleasure in hearing me at any time. But as this is the first time I have ever heard an objection like his made to a Senator having the right to discuss a resolution which he himself had introduced, I will say that if I had occupied one-fifth of the time on the floor that the Senator from Vermont has this session in the obstruction of legislation, I would not ask a little of its time in advancing some views that I think important to the people whom I represent. I shall ask on Tuesday of next week, after the morning hour, to be heard on my resolution, if the Senate will indulge me in that request.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I of course have nothing to say in reply to the statement of my friend that he will ask leave to take up his resolution; but in regard to another remark of his about my occupying four-fifths of the time that he has in obstructing legislation, I can say with all sincerity that if he had occupied one-tenth of the time that I have in obstructing vicious legislation, he would have done a great deal better than I have been able to do, I have no doubt, and I hope he will do it hereafter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois is entitled to the floor on the Geneva award bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I will give way to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. EATON. I call for the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first question is on postponing the pending bill.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut to take up House bill No. 4924.

The motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF NAME OF STEAMER.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Connecticut is kind enough to allow me to make a report. I report back from the Committee on Commerce the bill (S. No. 1475) to change the name of the steamer J. H. Kelly to John Thorn. It consists of a very few words; I ask that it be read; and if there be no objection I request immediate action upon it.

The bill was read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. DAWES in the chair.) Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear it explained a little.

Mr. CONKLING. This is a little passenger boat which did belong to one company. It has been purchased by another, and they wish to give it the name of their president. Here are the papers, prepared at my suggestion, showing all the facts which the committee is accustomed to require. I ask that the papers go to the files with the bill.

Mr. HEREFORD. I ask the Senator if there is not a mistake in the name. I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. The name is to be changed to John Thorn, who is the president or vice-president of the company which has purchased the boat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to get a little information first, and for information I should like to have the papers that the Senator from New York just submitted explaining the matter read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, March 29, 1880.

MY DEAR SIR: In regard to the bill for the change of the name of the steamer Kelly to John Thorn I desire to state as follows:

First. That the steamer is sound and seaworthy, having just been lengthened out and newly bottomed, and entirely refitted.

Second. That there are no claims against her of any kind. She is owned by Captain George Sweet, her master, and is run entirely in the interest of the Utica and Black River Railroad Company as a passenger and excursion boat.

Third. That the only object in the change of name is this: That she was formerly run in the interest of the Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg Railroad, a competing road, for the same purposes. We desire the name of John Thorn to connect her more closely with our business, John Thorn having been, as either president or vice-president, connected with our railroad for more than twenty years. I would add that she is now nearly ready to launch, and that if you see no objection we would like to change the name before she is launched, and would therefore like early action on the bill.

Truly yours,

DEWITT C. WEST,

Vice-President Utica and Black River Railroad Company.

Senator R. CONKLING,
United States Senate Chamber.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Yesterday I presented a memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin relating to the improvement of the Mississippi River and its tributaries. On my motion the memorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce. I think it ought to go to the Select Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries. I ask that the reference be changed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That change of reference will be ordered if there be no objection.

DEFICIENCIES IN APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations will be acted on as they are reached in the reading of the bill, unless there be objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I had a little rather the Chair would not make that order. Let the bill be read through, and then we can take up the amendments in their order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That course will be pursued.

Mr. EATON. Does the Senator from Vermont desire that the bill shall be read through?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is what I desire.

Mr. EATON. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read at length.

The bill was read.

Mr. EATON. Perhaps I ought to state, before the Senate enters further into the consideration of the bill, that the amount of the bill as it came from the House of Representatives was $8,324,155.50. The additions made by the Senate Committee on Appropriations amount to $350,799.22, and the deductions made by the committee amount to $107,000, so that the net additions made to the bill by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate are $243,799.22. The items which have been added by the committee, to which I will direct the attention of the Senate now, are:

For the Patent Office Gazette, $3,299.22.

For the Coast Survey, $15,000.

For the State, War, and Navy Departments building, $286,500.

For the National Museum building, $30,000.

For post-route maps, $5,000.

For extra clerk hire, &c., in State Department, $2,000.

For payment for Consular Regulations, $1,000.

For messenger to Senate Official Reporter's room, $1,200.

For settling swamp-land claims, $6,000.

For repairs to court-house in the District of Columbia, $800.

These are the items added by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate. Let the bill be now taken up and read by items, and I shall be prepared to make any explanation that is in my power.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. DAWES in the chair.) The Secretary will read the amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, in their order.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations is, in line 11, to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the item read:

For the public printing and binding and for paper for the public printing, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and for the Departments, and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving, $300,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why is that reduced?

Mr. EATON. It is reduced because a few days since Congress passed a bill appropriating $100,000, which perhaps the Senator from Vermont will remember, and it was stated at the time that it would decrease the general appropriation $100,000. That is all that is required.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What I should like to know is how this deficiency occurred. If the Public Printer has been violating the law and disobeying the acts of Congress in running into greater expenses than he was authorized to do—which, by the way, I have no reason to suppose—I should like to know it; and if he has, what means we are to take to prevent it in the future. If it is merely the fact that Congress has appropriated at a former session not money enough to carry on the Government and to fill the orders, if I may use a commercial expression, that the two Houses of Congress have made upon him, then I should like to know that. How did it happen that this deficiency occurred?

Mr. EATON. I do not know that I am able to give the information to the Senator from Vermont which he desires. I am able to give him this information, that there is a deficiency of $300,000 that is necessary to be made up in order to do the public printing which may be required to be done between this and the 30th of June, the close of the fiscal year. I am not about to bring an indictment against the Public Printer nor am I about to throw any mud or dirt at Congress if they failed to make as large an appropriation last year as they ought to have made. We find a deficiency here; the Public Printer says that it will require $400,000 in order to do all the work that is necessary to be done during this fiscal year, and therefore the committee say, let the Public Printer have it, and as we have already given him $100,000 of the $400,000 we have stricken this item down to $300,000. I do not know that I can give my friend from Vermont any further information on the subject besides what I have already given.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then, as I understand it, we are to vote this $300,000 or $400,000, as the case may be, blind. We do not know whether the deficiency occurred from the fault of Congress in not appropriating money enough to carry on what Congress had required to be carried on, or whether it arose from some abuse or misuse of the powers of the executive department, by which, of course, in this connection I only refer to the public printing part of the executive branch. I do think that with a Congress that is as wise, conservative, and economical, and patriotic, and far-seeing, as we must suppose this Congress is, composed as we know it is, this is a little short of the mark. Here we are to vote away $300,000 of the money of the taxpayers, and all the explanation that is given about it is the simple circumstance that we are that much short; but how it happens that we are that much short the committee is not prepared to tell us. Well, if the controlling powers of Congress are willing to leave it on that ground, I do not know that I have anything to say.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I do not propose to make any charges against the Public Printer. I do not propose to investigate that matter here. There is an item of six millions and a half in this deficiency bill, and I do not propose to charge against the Pension Office—because they could not foresee that great amount of deficiency—that there is any fraud in that office, or that there was any want of patriotism in Congress that it did not appropriate six and a half millions more for pensions than it did. We meet this fairly. I ought not to say, I will not say, that in my judgment the Public Printer has been guilty of any fraud. I have heard none charged against him. I should rather be disposed to say that there may have been a want of appropriation in the last Congress than to charge one of the public officers with any mismanagement of the funds placed in his hands. There is such a deficiency, and if we desire to have our printing done the coming three months, we had better make the appropriation to meet it.

I can give no further information to my friend from Vermont in regard to that item. I hope I shall be able better to satisfy him in regard to some other items.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut states the case now with the candor that belongs to his character; that is, that there is no just ground of complaint against the Public Printer, but that Congress at its former session, on some plea or other, did not choose to appropriate the amount of money that was necessary to carry on the public service, and he excuses that apparently upon the suggestion that as to the pension appropriations we did not appropriate enough. Well now, as to the pension appropriation, we all know that that depends upon the rapidity and the quantity, under the laws of Congress, of claims that come in and are disposed of, for as to pensions Congress has so broadened the purview of the duties of the Pension Office that we can readily see it. But as to the Public Printer his duties are strictly defined by law, not in an indefinite and discretionary way, but he can only print the acts of Congress, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the orders of the Departments for specific reports and books, &c., about which there can be no dispute, and such other documents as the two Houses by concurrent resolution may order and as either House may order up to a cost of $500 in any one case.

So, then, it comes to this, that at the session of Congress last year we did not appropriate money enough to carry on the very operations that Congress has directed. The two Houses of Congress, in other words, have from time to time ordered the printing of documents and papers, and so on, and have engaged in debates increasing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to such an extent that there is now a deficiency of $300,000 or $400,000, a real deficiency of $400,000, $100,000 of which was provided for two or three days ago. That is what it comes to. So this deficiency arises from the fact that the two Houses of Congress themselves have chosen to expend the money of the people by $400,000 beyond what they were willing to authorize to be expended in the regular appropriation bill; that is to say, special committees have been taking testimony on all sorts of questions, hunting up something, which has increased the printing to be done. Well, that may be useful; I do not mean to go into a debate now about that; I only want to understand exactly on what ground it is that I am expected as the special representative of a small part of the people of the United States and as the general representative, as I think every Senator is, of all the people of the United States, to know where I am to go in this case.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I did not understand the Senator from Connecticut to say that there had not been appropriations sufficient at the last Congress to run the printing department. I understood him to say that he did not feel authorized to make any charges against the Public Printer, but simply to state that there had not been sufficient appropriations at the last Congress to meet the requirements of that department. I do not suppose that any member of the Senate can definitely say that the deficiency has arisen either from a want of sufficient appropriations or from a want of a proper expenditure by the head of that department of the appropriations placed under his control by Congress. I say very frankly that I do not know whether that deficiency has arisen from the fact that there was not a sufficient appropriation made by Congress, or from the fact that there has been an improper expenditure of the money placed at the disposal of the Public Printer. I find the fact reported to the Senate by the committee having charge of the appropriation that there is a deficiency and that it is absolutely necessary to run the printing department. As we have the authority of the committee that there is a deficiency, I feel justified in voting for it notwithstanding I do not know what is the real cause whereby the deficiency has occurred.

The Senator from Vermont seems to assume that this deficiency has arisen because there was an insufficient appropriation by the last Congress. That may or may not be true; but I apprehend that the Senator from Vermont does not know that that is true. I apprehend that he has not investigated the matter sufficiently to get up and on his responsibility as a Senator assert that the deficiency arises from the want of a sufficient appropriation by the last Congress.

The papers have been teeming with reports of maladministration in the printing department. I will not say that those reports are true or that they are false. I am not here simply upon the statements of newspaper reports to accuse a public officer of having been derelict in his duty, and, unless the Senator from Vermont has himself personally investigated this matter and arrived at the conclusion that there was not a sufficient appropriation made by the last Congress, I do not think it is exactly proper that he should rise here and say that the Congress of the United States failed to do its duty and to make the proper appropriation for that department. Whenever, upon his responsibility after a personal examination, he is prepared to rise here and say that the Public Printer has not wasted any public money, that he has applied properly every dollar to the necessary purposes for which it was voted, he may be entitled to charge that there has been dereliction on the part of Congress in a failure to make the proper appropriations for that department. So far as I am concerned, I do not know where the cause of this deficiency arises. It may be because there was not a sufficient appropriation; it may be because there has not been a prudent expenditure of the money on the part of the Public Printer.

It is true that the Public Printer does not at all times control the expenditures of his department. For his paper the committees in charge of public printing of the Senate and House accept the lowest bid. And yet it is true that he has to expend upon his own responsibility a large amount of money for the purchase of materials and the purchase of type and the purchase of plates of various kinds and of paper also; and further, a large discretion is vested in him in reference to the number of the employes as well as the pay which is given to the employes of the office. It may be that on a proper investigation of the whole affair Congress would be exculpated from the charge of the Senator from Vermont, and that the dereliction would be found traceable somewhere else.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Delaware decorates still more highly, if it were possible, the honors that belong to this present Congress of the United States, of which we are both members. Now without making any inquiry into how a deficiency in the public Treasury has occurred, we are expected to be willing to go it blind, because we do not know whether the deficiency occurred from the rapacity or misconduct of some officer, or from our own want of a proper understanding of our duties in making the original appropriation, or from our excessive expenditures in all sorts of raids and screeds, as they are sometimes called, on our own part, and we are to have the honor of going down to posterity as a Congress that is willing to vote three or four hundred thousand dollars of the public money without knowing how it happened that this money is needed and stands as a deficiency. Well, Mr. President, that would be enough for me on that point.

Now as to the conduct of the Public Printer I wish to say that I am willing to assert on my responsibility as a Senator, broad or little, that after some investigation and inquiry into that subject, I believe that the Public Printer has in every respect followed the laws and obeyed the orders the Congress of the United States in its two Houses has imposed upon him, and that this deficiency is the consequence of the action of the Congress of the United States in such commands and orders, and in its failure to provide sufficient money in the first place.

I hope that is sufficiently definite, and that is where I am willing to leave it.

Mr. EATON. The honorable Senator from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] gave notice that the consideration of this bill would give rise to a political debate. I supposed the political debate would come at the other end of the bill, and not at this end.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator does not think this is a political debate.

Mr. EATON. I do not mean to say anything offensive to the honorable Senator from Vermont, but I certainly think that he has endeavored to throw a little mud at the Congress which heretofore passed upon this bill and did not give, he says, money enough; but he says the Public Printer in his judgment is entirely clear from blame.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is entirely mistaken, he will pardon me—

Mr. EATON. I am very glad to hear it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish to throw any mud at anybody, much less at the Congress of the United States, of which I am an individual member, and consequently should get somewhat soiled in my apparel myself. I only wished to have the Congress of the United States, if it were possible, appear in its true light in the eyes of the people who created it; that is all.

Mr. EATON. Well, Mr. President, if this is the first time in the history of the Senator from Vermont that he is willing to vote for a deficiency in regard to a public expenditure that cannot exactly be explained fully to his satisfaction at the time he votes it, he has been an exceedingly fortunate man.

There are a thousand things that have occurred that ought at once to suggest themselves to the Senator from Vermont, and one thing is this: the great increase in the price of material which has occurred since the appropriations of last year. Nobody knows that better than my honorable friend from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY,] both in his public and in his private business. And, therefore, well might the committee of the House have made an estimate a year ago that cannot be covered to-day, for the expenditure is very much larger than could have been anticipated. I reiterate that I am not about to charge upon the Public Printer any dereliction of duty; I am not about to charge upon the Public Printer that he has squandered the public money; I am not about to charge either a committee of the other House or of this House with wantonly passing an appropriation which they knew was not sufficient to carry on the public business, for I do not believe that can be said of the committees of either House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in line 11.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 17, in the appropriations for the Internal Revenue, Treasury Department, to reduce the appropriation "for additional amount to pay salaries and expenses of agents and surveyors, for fees and expenses of gaugers, for salaries of storekeepers, and for miscellaneous expenses, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1880," from $320,000 to $313,000.

Mr. EATON. In the House bill the deficit appropriated for is $320,000. The sum required by the Department is $313,000, not $320,000. Therefore your committee have proposed to reduce the appropriation from $320,000 to $313,000. I desire to say, for the information of the Senate, that the committee last year gave to this Department their full estimate, everything that they said would be required for this particular branch of the public service, and the deficit is still $313,000. I want to say here, as I said before, that Congress last year appropriated all that was required by the Department. The Department erred; they erred $313,000; they come here now and ask that that deficiency may be given them. I do not believe there has been any fraudulent expenditure in that Department, and yet the Commissioner of Internal Revenue does not give in his letter to the Treasury Department those full reasons that I should be glad to see so that I could give to the Senate the cause for the deficiency. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue says:

Since penning my report I have caused an examination to be made of the expenditures for this service for the first five months of last year, and a corresponding period of this year, and I find that the increase in the number of distilleries has been such as to increase the expenditure for storekeepers and gaugers for five months of this year $70,000 over that for the same period last year. If these expenditures continue for this year the deficiency will be at least $313,000.

That is all the information that the Secretary of the Treasury or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has given us, and upon that we ask that this deficiency of $313,000 may be made up.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it ought to be stated also, if the Senator will allow me, that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue tells us that during the last year there was a very large increase in the number of distilleries.

Mr. EATON. I have just read that from his communication to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. ALLISON. I know. It is stated there in very brief form, but I think sufficiently clear to show us that an additional appropriation is necessary on that account, because every new distillery that is established requires a new survey to be paid for, and requires the appointment of a gauger and a storekeeper, which is a continuous appointment and must be paid for. Therefore I submit that there is quite a sufficient statement upon which we can justify this appropriation.

Mr. EATON. I have no doubt about it. I read precisely what my friend from Iowa has said. I read what the Commissioner gave us. He made his estimates last year. He made a mistake. He could not foresee the amount of expenditure, he could not see the increase in distilleries, any more than we could estimate last year the increase in the price of the paper that the Public Printer has had to use.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How does the Senator from Connecticut call it a mistake of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, then, that he could not see into the future and see that an increased manufacture of whisky would take place? I think that a part of this deficiency arises from what we so often see every day in the public prints of the operations of those people called "the moonshiners," illicit distillers, that have to be broken up for the protection not only of the revenue but of all honest manufacturers engaged in that species of industry.

Mr. EATON. My friend is entirely mistaken. There is another deficiency that applies to them. This does not apply to them at all. The "moonshiners" have not anything to do with this deficiency of $313,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I see that this provides for the "salaries and expenses of agents." Now, agents of the Internal Revenue Bureau—

Mr. EATON. That is not a part of this $313,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I am reading it in the exact connection. I will begin at line 13: "Internal Revenue: For additional amount to pay salaries and expenses of agents and surveyors, for fees and expenses of gaugers, for salaries of storekeepers," &c., $320,000, reduced by the committee to $313,000. The agents of the Internal Revenue Department are those persons who are necessarily employed to keep the internal-revenue taxation even and fair as it respects honest distillers and operators, and to protect the revenue against dishonest and illicit distillation.

As I say, according to the newspapers, I will not say in certain sections, because that is unconstitutional, but in certain parts of the country, every day or two we perceive that there has been a raid on "moonshiners," which implies that a special or general agent of the Treasury Department has discovered by expensive inquiries that illicit distilling is carried on somewhere, and that that illicit distilling is so formidable in respect of the personal strength of the persons engaged in it and their neighbors, that it cannot be put down by the ordinary and quiet processes of the law, but requires an armed body of special agents and assistants, and so on, whatever they may be, to proceed to the place and seize the illicit distillery and break it up. They are resisted by force of arms, and the result may be one way or the other. Sometimes it is one way, and sometimes it is the other. Sometimes the Government succeeds, sometimes the opponents of the Government succeed. But all that involves large expense. That of course is a thing which cannot be very well calculated for in advance.

I can readily see therefore that in respect of the expense of the agents of the Treasury Department there might be a large deficiency growing out of this circumstance, known to everybody, that in a considerable part of the United States where this species of industry, if it can be called such, is going on, there is found an absolute necessity for the purposes I have named, of revenue and of equal protection of the laws to those who do pay taxes, of organizing inquiries, organizing armed forces of special agents to make arrests and seize illicit distilleries. I can perceive, therefore, why there is a reason for a deficiency of this kind, even under this head, because it does include agents. I have not therefore the difficulty that I had in respect of the public printing matter, where every single step the Public Printer takes is provided for by law.

Mr. EATON. I desire to say again that the Senator from Vermont is entirely mistaken. This deficiency of $313,000 has nothing whatever to do with the subject-matter about which he has been talking.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In that respect we differ.

Mr. EATON. I think I shall be able to convince my friend that he is wrong. The appropriation bill passed a year ago contained this item:

For salaries and expenses of agents and surveyors—

Just the words employed in this bill—for fees and expenses of gauger, for salaries of storekeepers, and for miscellaneous expenses, $1,500,000.

There is where the deficiency is here. Now, what next?

For detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws or accessory to the same, including payments for information and detection, $75,000.

That was enough. The Department asked for no more to convict and take care of moonshiners. The $75,000 is not expended and there is no deficiency required in that item. The deficiency is for an entirely different thing. I think that the Senator from Vermont will be satisfied of his error.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am satisfied of the extraordinary astuteness of my honorable friend from Connecticut in the statement that he has made, which prima facie certainly has a tendency in that direction; but the Senator will readily see that the "agents," which is the term employed in this present deficiency clause, are "agents" that the Internal Revenue Bureau is obliged to employ in a greater or less degree according to the extent of the illicit moonshining distillation. So, with entire respect and agreement with what the Senator has said about the other clauses he has referred to, it is still apparent to my mind that this "moonshine" business is involved in a large degree in the expenses of the "agents" of the Department.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say only one word on this subject. I think the Senator from Vermont, while technically perhaps right, is mistaken in his general view of this appropriation. It is true that a portion of this money will go to agents, and the agents may be employed in some of the States referred to, but they are not agents for this purpose; they are agents under the law. For example, the law provides that there shall be thirty-five internal-revenue agents. That number cannot be increased, and it is not very likely to be diminished. Their salaries are provided for in the regular appropriation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will pardon me, there are thirty-five revenue agents; but does the Senator mean to say that the Treasury Department cannot employ a special agent for special occasions?

Mr. ALLISON. I do mean to say, in substance, that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue cannot employ agents, as such, for any purpose beyond the number indicated in the statute. If he employs servants or persons to detect illicit distillers in any of the States, he must do it under some other name than under the name of "agents of the internal-revenue service;" they must be deputy collectors, or storekeepers, or some other officer than an "agent" within the meaning of the statute. But these agents are allowed, of course, for their expenses, and I presume there is some deficiency in the appropriation for the regularly employed agents of the Government. If so, of course this appropriation pro tanto will apply to them; but I must agree with my friend from Connecticut, that this is not intended in any sense to provide a fund to detect illicit distilling in any of the States of this Union. That distinct provision is found in another clause of the regular appropriation act.

Therefore, I do not think that this deficiency arises from any increase in illicit distilling in the South. On the contrary, I think it arises from the fact that the illicit distillation has been in the main broken up, and that many of those who were engaged in the mountains in illicit distilling are now going into the regular business of distilling, are allowing the distilleries to be surveyed, and allowing gaugers, storekeepers, &c., to be appointed, coming in under the regular provisions of the act relating to the manufacture of distilled spirits; and so coming it is necessary that this appropriation shall be increased for the purpose of carrying on these regular operations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator from Iowa would allow me, I should like to ask him, or my honorable friend from Connecticut, because it is a very interesting subject, to state to the Senate how extensive this business of illicit distilling has been in the last year or two, say, take the last year, and how much the energy of the Government has to be exerted in respect of putting that down, as distinguished from the ordinary and orderly operations of the Internal Revenue Department? The newspapers are all the time so full of it that it really becomes a subject of public import that I should be glad on this occasion to have explained.

Mr. EATON. I think I can explain it, and in making my explanation I wish to correct an error that I fell into myself; but I am very glad that I did, because I shall now satisfy my friend from Vermont that he is entirely in error in the argument which he has had the honor to make:

For detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws, or accessory to the same, including payments for information and detection, $75,000.

That clause was in the regular appropriation bill last year. I said that it was under this clause that all the money was given that the Department needed for the purpose to which my friend from Vermont alluded, and that they required no additional fund. I am wrong in that; but, being wrong there, I desire to show my friend from Vermont how utterly he is wrong in using the word "agents" in the way in which he does.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am quite willing to be wrong with my friend from Connecticut on such a point.

Mr. EATON. In error I will say.

For detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws, or conniving in such crime, including payments for information and detection, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1878, $7,547.35.

So it seems that the estimate was $75,000, and it now turns out that the Commissioner desires $7,547.35 more.

Mr. ALLISON. Which we do not give him?

Mr. EATON. Which we do not give him. We say that in our judgment he can get along without it, and therefore we do not give him that at all. We say, "Hands off the Treasury in that regard for the coming three months." He does not require it in our judgment, and we will not give it to him. But it ought to satisfy my friend from Vermont that the word "agents" here has no reference whatever to agents whose duty it is to protect the revenue laws in the particular to which he has alluded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend will pardon me, what then does the words "agents" really apply to? That is what I should like to know. We are here appropriating money for specific objects, and if this agency has nothing to do with the operations of the Internal Revenue Bureau, I do not see why the term "agents" is in the bill.

Mr. EATON. Of course it has to do with the operations of the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If it has, then I should be glad to know, if the Senator from Iowa was correct in saying that the salaries of these people, thirty-five in number, are fixed by law, how it is that there can be a deficiency in respect of them? That is what I should like to know on that point.

Mr. ALLISON. I can answer the Senator, if he will allow me. This is an appropriation covering a number of specific items in the original act, I take it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, in the original act.

Mr. ALLISON. The same phraseology was used in the original appropriation that is employed here. A certain sum of money may be used for surveyors, a certain amount for gaugers, storekeepers, and so on, and the money in that way may be exhausted. If so, another fund must be appropriated to pay the salaries of these agents and their expenses. This is a sort of common fund from which the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized to draw for several purposes, one of which is to pay these agents. If he has drawn out the fund for another purpose, of course an appropriation must be made for agents, and therefore that phraseology is used in this bill as it is used in the original act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator does not mean to say that the Treasury Department has been robbing Peter to pay Paul.

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir, Peter and Paul are together in this appropriation; they go along hand in hand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But Peter and Paul must each eat with his own spoon when it comes to the actual point of a salary. Therefore, if the Secretary of the Treasury through this bureau has taken all the money that was appropriated for the salaries of agents and applied it to the other objects named in this clause, then I must say that the Secretary of the Treasury has exceeded in my opinion, with great respect to him and everybody else, the proper administration of his duty. I do not think, to use the language of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] so pertinent on all occasions, that that will do. There must be something else about this matter. If these salaries are fixed by law, and the number of persons is fixed by law, I am not able to see how it is that there can be a deficiency unless Congress failed to appropriate the money to pay the salaries to those persons before; and I supposed, and I think I may be excused for supposing so, that where this bill used the word "agents" in connection with the deficiency, there was a deficiency in respect of agents.

Mr. ALLISON. There may be, or may not be.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If there may not be, then before Congress votes a deficiency for agents, it ought to know whether there is or is not. But that is perhaps a small matter comparatively except as a question of practice. What I wish to get at, which really is a matter of great public importance and this is a good occasion to do it, is how extensive and how expensive are the operations of these illicit distillers, moonshiners so called, in various parts of the country, that the Government is called upon of course to put down in every way, for the two reasons that I have named, public revenue and justice to honest distillers. How extensively that operation is going on, and whether there is any reason to believe that the means we have already provided for putting it down are adequate to the purpose, I should be very glad on this occasion to be informed of.

Mr. EATON. I can only inform the Senator how much it has cost for the past year; that I can do; $75,000 was appropriated for that purpose, and the Commissioner asks for $7,000 more. Therefore, add $7,000 to $75,000 and it gives, according to the theory of the Commissioner, $82,000 for the current year to convict these offenders.

Mr. CARPENTER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Connecticut why the $7,000 asked for by the Commissioner is withheld?

Mr. EATON. I do not think it is necessary for him to have it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why not?

Mr. CARPENTER. Why not? The recommendation of the Department seems to prevail with the committee on another item; why not on this?

Mr. EATON. I do not now remember that there was anybody who objected in the committee. We said, "We think he can get along without this money."

Mr. CARPENTER. The object of the committee evidently was to give the moonshiners some chance.

Mr. EATON. My friend does not quite mean that, but he has a happy way of using language of that character. I will not reply to that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator from Connecticut cannot give, as I have no doubt he can, a more complete reason for withholding this $7,000 that he speaks of, that is supposed to apply to the illicit-distillery business, than he has given, I think we ought not to agree to this amendment, because it certainly is among the most important of the objects of the Government, as a matter of revenue and as a matter of duty to those who do obey the law, to provide for putting down illegal distillation. As this difference recommended by the committee is supposed to apply to that, I hope the Senator from Connecticut will state to us distinctly and fully the reasons why it is that this money should not be appropriated for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAMLIN. The amendment was reported by the committee?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; and they give no reason for it at all.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall vote against the amendment, and I shall do it for the reason that I think the House of Representatives must have intended, although we saw no evidence of it, to supply this $7,000 by increasing the estimate of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue from $313,000 to $320,000. I am sorry to differ from the committee in reference to this matter. I think the Senator from Connecticut in charge of the bill will remember that this amendment was more for the purpose of securing a definite and accurate explanation than for any purpose to cripple the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in any proper sum to which he was entitled. Therefore I shall vote to give him the sum that the House proposed.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I should like to ask my colleague a question. I want to vote understandingly upon this amendment, if I can. If I understand it, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue requires $7,000 to aid him in putting down illicit distilling?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Allowing him that $7,000, we should make this appropriation $320,000?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The committee have stricken out the $7,000 that he wanted for that purpose and have refused to let him have it. Now, according to the opinion of the committee, can he carry on successfully the work of preventing illicit distilling during the remainder of the fiscal year without that money?

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator address the question to me?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. To anybody.

Mr. EATON. I will say to my friend that this $7,547 to which my friend alluded is in the general deficiency estimate. It has no application whatever to the difference between $313,000 and $320,000 here; not the slightest, for here are the items.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What in the world has this to do with that?

Mr. ALLISON. I say the House may have so regarded it.

Mr. EATON. I do not see how they could. Here is the schedule of amounts found due already by the Comptroller to some thirty-odd individuals—

Mr. ALLISON. That is an entirely different thing, if the Senator will allow me. That is under the prior year, 1878-'79.

Mr. EATON. I understand that; but this is the application which is given to this request.

Mr. ALLISON. I know; but I understood the Senator from Connecticut to say in reply to the Senator from Vermont that there was an item of $7,000 in order to complete the service of this year on account of illicit distillation. If so, the House may have included that item here; and therefore it is that I would, rather than take any chances upon this matter, vote against the amendment proposed by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. TELLER, (when his name was called.) If this is a political question, and it seems to be assuming that shape, I am paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. COCKRELL, (when Mr. VEST's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. VEST] has been called home upon important business, and is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] upon all questions. If he were here, he would vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 27, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—27.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 60, to insert:

For the continuation of the Coast and Geodetic Survey in the eastern division, (or Atlantic and Gulf coasts division,) $7,500.
For the continuation of the Coast and Geodetic Survey in the western division, (or the Pacific coast division,) $7,500.

Mr. EATON. Perhaps I ought for the information of the other branch of Congress to place in the RECORD, so that they may have an opportunity to see it to-morrow, a letter from Captain Patterson, which induced the Senate Committee on Appropriations to add to the appropriation. Without taking the trouble to read it, I will ask that the Reporter insert the letter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be inserted in the RECORD if there is no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

UNITED STATES COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY OFFICE,
Washington, March 17, 1880.

DEAR SIR: I beg to state, in reference to the unexpected necessity of requesting a small deficiency appropriation for this work, that I had earnestly hoped to have gotten through the year without a deficiency item, and so ordered and reduced the work to accomplish that result, as I hoped; but the constantly increasing prices of so many articles during the past year have entirely disarranged my plans. In those things that enter into the repairs of vessels I will state that iron, for which $14 per ton was paid eighteen months ago, is now selling at $32. Repairs that were estimated at $5,000 in March, 1879, cost in the summer of that year $9,500. Another estimate for repairs was made in April, 1879, for $2,800, and in November the same parties refused to do the work for $5,000. It was of course not done. As the item for repairs of vessels, &c., is entirely expended, and vessels are awaiting repairs, the House of Representatives inserted that item asked in the deficiency bill to the amount of $10,000.

For the continuation of the work in the eastern division (Atlantic and Gulf coasts) and the western division (Pacific coast) $15,000 each has been asked. The Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives has declined to insert these two items in the deficiency bill.

In nearly every article used for this work the price has increased from 15 to 50 per cent. In the ration of the men alone, taking the whole field of work into consideration, there has been an increase of ten cents per day each, involving an additional expense of from $400 to $800 per month. Lumber used for signals and for other purposes has increased in value from 20 to 30 per cent.; nails from three cents to eight cents per pound, &c. These items are named merely for illustration.

The $15,000 in each division is asked for to enable me to keep the few parties now out in the field until July 1, and also to place three or four important parties on the triangulation line connecting the Atlantic and Pacific coasts in the field as early as April or May, to take advantage of the opening and most favorable months of the season, the atmosphere being generally obscured by smoke during the summer. By waiting for the next regular appropriation, not available before July, that month is lost in placing the parties in the field, leaving only the late and unfavorable (on account of the smoke) months of the season for work, which in the western portion includes lines of from fifty to one hundred and fifty miles in length, therefore requiring the clearest atmosphere, obtainable in the early months, for observing.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, the total appropriation for this work was $480,000 and the deficiency item allowed by Congress was $80,000. For the year ending June 30, 1879, the regular appropriation was $548,000 and the deficiency allowed was $40,000, the Senate voting $75,000, which amount was reduced in the conference committee to $40,000 on two items. The regular appropriation for the current fiscal year is also $548,000, and the total deficiency asked for is $40,000 on three items.

I therefore would most respectfully urge that the amount of the deficiency items for this work may be allowed.

Yours respectfully,

C. P. PATTERSON,
Superintendent.

Hon. W. W. EATON,
Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 87, to insert:

For continuing the construction of the north wing of the State, War, and Navy Departments building, $286,500.

Mr. EATON. The committee became satisfied, abundantly satisfied, I do not know that there was any difference of opinion, that this increase ought to be made. There is a very large amount of work yet to be done. The committee believed it absolutely necessary that the money should be given now, so that the superintendent may make his contract. If we should wait for the general deficiency bill in order to put in this sum, in my judgment, there would be a great loss of money to the United States. Therefore, as a matter of public economy, in the judgment of your committee this addition ought to be made.

Mr. BECK. I desire to add to what the Senator from Connecticut has said, so that it may appear in the RECORD and save trouble hereafter, that Colonel Casey, the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, stated to the committee that it was necessary to buy a large quantity of iron as girders for the first story, and he wanted to make a contract now. He is not allowed to do it; he can make no contract until the money is furnished him. If he has to wait until July, with the pressure of all the iron establishments at this time as he showed to us, perhaps it will be August before he will be able to go on with his work and he would have to delay everything else. He would have to discharge his master workmen and all others, and everything would stand idle. The absolute necessity of making those contracts—especially his iron contract—now, in order to get the work done within a reasonable time, seems to me to make it imperative to have this money now for use.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to inquire of the member of the committee having the bill in charge whether this sum is sufficient to enable the parties having the building in charge to make contracts for the finishing of the building or whether it will enable them only to make partial contracts?

Mr. EATON. I will inform my colleague that Colonel Casey was before the committee, and this was the exact amount that he required. He said that it would be all that would be necessary for present purposes, not sufficient to finish the building by any means, but all that would be necessary for present purposes.

Mr. PLATT. The reason of my making the inquiry was because I have within my limited observation found that the Government is constructing buildings at very great cost from the fact that sufficient money is not appropriated at first to complete the building. My colleague will have in mind the instance of the post-office at Hartford, which has been a great number of years in construction with an occasional appropriation which just suffices to get the workmen at work upon the building, and then the appropriation runs out. It is certainly a matter of economy to make such an appropriation as shall enable a contract to be made for the whole building.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee after line 87.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment will be reported. Mr. EDMUNDS. Before we pass to the next amendment I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill to explain to us, if it be in order to do so, the clause on the fourth page of the bill, from lines 74 to 83, inclusive, which provides:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ one of the steamers of the revenue marine, now on the Pacific coast, for the relief of the officers and crews of the whaling barks Mount Wallaston and Vigilant, now imprisoned in the Arctic Ocean; and such sum of money, not exceeding $6,000, as may be necessary to properly strengthen and equip such steam-cutter, and to carry out the object of this provision, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

I should be glad to know what that means, upon what principle it is that this appropriation is to be made, and the circumstances out of which the supposed necessity for the appropriation grows.

Mr. EATON. All that I can say to my friend from Vermont is that it is believed that help may be given to the officers and crews of two whaling barks that are now imprisoned in the Arctic Ocean; and in order that the Government may afford that assistance it is said by the proper authorities that they require $6,000 for the purpose of equipping and strengthening and putting into condition a Government vessel to send out to look for these imprisoned mariners. I think myself that it is a very good expenditure of a small sum of money, quite as good, quite as much in the way of charity, as it is to send a Government vessel abroad for the purpose of doing good to the people of another land. Therefore the committee were in favor of that provision of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am, I hope, not behind the Senator from Connecticut in my disposition to help the citizens of the United States who are imprisoned in the Arctic Ocean, if there be any such; but what I wished to know was what is the information upon which this appropriation rests? Have we any communication from any head of a Department, or the President of the United States, referring to this subject? We all know, of course, that the enterprise of American citizens is so great that they penetrate to the remotest seas for the purpose of catching whales and other fishes, if a whale is a fish, but that is a question I do not intend to occupy the time of the Senate in discussing now.

Mr. EATON. If the Senator went into that I fear we should not reach the debating part of the bill till dark. I will very frankly say to the Senator from Vermont that there has been no communication between the Senate Committee on Appropriations and the Department of the Treasury with regard to the use of a revenue cutter, but the newspapers have been teeming with the history of the imprisonment of American sailors in those two barks. Therefore the House committee deemed it advisable to converse with the proper authorities and ascertain how much money it would take to put into condition a revenue cutter, equip her, and strengthen her, and send her into the Arctic seas, and therefore the cocoa-nut here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That amounts then to saying that we are proceeding upon something that some House committee is supposed to have ascertained as a matter of fact?

Mr. EATON. I give my friend all the information I have.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If that is the proper method of Senate administration in appropriating money, of course I have nothing to say. I had the impression that the committee would be able to tell us in some authoritative way what the circumstances are connected with this clause in the bill. In reply to my inquiry the Senator says only that there is a statement and an estimate submitted by the newspapers, not by the head of a Department or by the President of the United States on this subject.

Mr. EATON. I have not said that. I will read, if my friend desires, what has been said in another place.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That I must ask to be excused from hearing, if the Senator means by another place—

Mr. EATON. I mean in another place.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If he means the House of Representatives then I must object to it.

Mr. EATON. I do not mean anything except another place; if the Senator does not wish to hear it, I shall not read it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish to hear it, because I know what the Senator means.

Mr. EATON. How does the Senator know what I mean, when I have not explained my meaning?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know by that kind of Yankee intuition that is common not only in Connecticut but in Vermont; and whenever and wherever I can preserve the independence, as far as I may, of the two bodies of the Houses of Congress, by having each body proceed upon its own information and not upon the action and discussions of the other House, I intend to do it, not as making a criticism upon this measure that is now suggested here, which I presume may be entirely right, but in order to preserve the true balance of this Government, and you can only preserve it by insisting upon the proper methods of consideration and discussion upon every occasion on which it arises; there is no other occasion on which you can do it. Therefore I must be excused from having any reason furnished to me by any proceedings or debates in the House of Representatives.

I had hoped, as I say, that we should have had something more definite than what we all have read in the newspapers in respect of these unfortunate mariners. I am far from saying that I shall be unwilling, even on newspaper information, to vote for an appropriation of money for this object; but I do think that it would be desirable as a rule that some responsible Department of the Government should furnish us such information as we could rely upon more than upon the newspapers of the condition of things which calls upon us to appropriate this money. It is in a deficiency bill, and as such, like every deficiency bill, it ought to be carefully scanned. If there is a just reason for appropriating the money, by all means appropriate it; but if there be none, then we ought not to appropriate it. Yet all the Senator tells us is that there is somewhere in the newspapers a statement that the mariners of these two ships are I suppose inclosed in ice in the Arctic Ocean; I presume he does not mean that they are in jail up there, but that they are inclosed in ice; and in that case of course every sentiment of humanity (waiving the Constitution for the moment, although I do not think we need to waive it about the appropriation of money) would lead us to appropriate whatever is necessary in order to aid in their relief and release them from this imprisonment, as it is called, as stated in the bill.

I rose in perfect good faith to ask the Senator from Connecticut to tell us, if he had any official information, what the real state of the case is; but he does not seem to be disposed to do it.

Mr. BOOTH. I am at a loss to know how we could get any official information in regard to these vessels. This item, however, is not predicated merely upon newspaper articles. The captains of the other vessels of the whaling fleet have returned. They usually go out in October. They say they left these two vessels in the Arctic Ocean, and it is very desirable if anything can be done that a vessel should be sent to their relief as early as June. It is not improbable that when the thaw comes these vessels may go to pieces. In the mean time the crews may have got to the main land. These vessels are owned in New Bedford. Some very public spirited men in San Francisco have agreed to furnish the provision for this ship, and the Treasury Department has said, in fact, that the vessel needs strengthening now, and there is no loss by strengthening it. I suppose there is no very serious objection to the clause.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As we are going through the bill, as it is more convenient perhaps now, I should like to have my friend from Connecticut explain the provision on page 5, from line 92 to line 95 inclusive, about "the final installment due for the execution of the colossal statue of Admiral Farragut, $10,000." I had the impression that the whole of the money provided by law had been appropriated. I should like to have a history of that, so as to be sure that we have not already appropriated all the money required for that purpose.

Mr. ALLISON. On what page?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Page 5. I repeat that I was under the impression that all the necessary appropriations had already been made. If this is a new grant of money, it certainly ought to be explained.

Mr. EATON. The committee were informed that the contract price for this statue was $20,000 and that $10,000 had been appropriated and paid. The Secretary of the Navy asks for an appropriation of $10,000 for the purpose of paying what the United States owes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator be kind enough to send that communication to the desk that it may be read to us?

Mr. EATON. I can read it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Or the Senator will read it, if he will be kind enough to do so.

Mr. EATON. It is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 13, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that the Department is in receipt of a communication from Mrs. Vinnie Ream Hoxie, stating that the granite pedestal for the statue of Admiral Farragut has been cut, and will be placed in position in Farragut Square by the middle of March next. The plaster model for the statue has been completed and accepted as provided for in the contract. It is prepared for casting in bronze, and this work is now in progress, and will be completed also about the middle of March. The statue and pedestal will then be completed and erected, and the contract fulfilled on her part. This being done she will be entitled under the contract to the remaining installment of $10,000, to be paid to her by the Secretary of the Navy.

I have, therefore, the honor to request that the sum of $10,000 may be appropriated to enable the Department to comply with the contract.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

HON. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has the Senator a copy of the contract here that we can see it?

Mr. EATON. No, sir, I have not. I can send for it and get it if the Senator from Vermont would like to have it. I took it for granted that Mr. Thompson had given us a true statement in regard to the contract and I did not send for it. The committee believes that the Secretary of the Navy tells the truth when he says that the contract was for $20,000 and that there is required $10,000 now to pay it all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope that the Senator from Connecticut will not be in advance of me in the respect that he bears to the Secretary of the Navy; but at the same time I suppose that when any Department of the Government requires us to appropriate money, or ask us, which is a more proper term, to carry out contracts, we should be able to see for ourselves what the contract is, because whether one sum or another is called for depends upon the construction of the contract. I have the impression, as I said before, that more than $10,000 has already been appropriated for this purpose. The provision may be perfectly correct; and if this cannot be construed into a grant beyond the contract price, whatever it was, then of course there is no objection to it. If it can, then it opens quite different considerations. It might be right then or it might not.

Mr. VOORHEES. The contract calls ultimately for $20,000. Ten thousand dollars have been paid. This does not call for one single dollar or cent beyond the express terms of the contract. That I submit of my personal knowledge.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And that contract, if I understand the Senator's meaning, was a contract that was authorized by law?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes, sir; it was authorized by law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So that this is pursuant to some act of Congress?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes, sir; this is in pursuance of law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the committee will be reported.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 103, to insert:

For Navy pensions to invalids, widows, minors, and dependent relatives, $140,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 110 and 111 in the following words:

For Navy pensions to invalids, widows, minors, and dependent relatives, $140,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained. Why is it proper to strike that out?

Mr. EATON. Because as the bill came from the House this item was not in the proper place, the committee thought.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the amendment in line 104, if I understand it, takes its place?

Mr. WITHERS. It is a transposition.

Mr. EATON. The previous amendment in lines 104 and 105 takes the place of these lines 110 and 111.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh yes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 111, to insert:

Patent Office: To pay for illustrations for the Official Gazette, $3,299.22.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear explained how this deficiency arises. It is certainly desirable to know how the administration of the Patent Office is carried on that it produces a deficiency of any sum, considering the organization of that department.

Mr. EATON. The Department of the Interior informs us that there will be "a deficiency of $3,299.22 in the appropriation for illustrations for the Patent Office Official Gazette for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and respectfully recommend the same to the favorable consideration of Congress." This is from the Secretary of the Interior. We find from the Patent Office that unless this deficiency is made up the publication will cease. Believing that the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Patents have told us the truth, we have given this three thousand and odd hundred dollars.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senate ready for the question on agreeing to the amendment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have just read the statement of the Commissioner of Patents in which he refers to a communication from the publisher of the Gazette who makes the following statement, under the date of the 7th of March, addressed to the "general," whoever he may be:

GENERAL: Since my communication of the 14th ultimo relative to the necessity for an additional appropriation for the Gazette the bills for the illustrations for the issues of February 10, 17, 24, and March 2, amounting to $1,842.40, have been paid. The cost of these just about equals my estimate, and demonstrates that the deficiency asked for, $3,299.22, with the balance on hand, $3,820.80, and the amounts saved from salaries, $913.98, aggregating, $5,034.03, will barely suffice for the remaining seventeen numbers of the year.

The balance on hand is sufficient to pay for the illustrations up to and including the issue of April 27, and the amount saved from salaries will pay for the two succeeding numbers, May 4 and 11; after which, if no additional appropriation is made, it will be necessary to suspend publication.

As now two weeks are consumed in preparing the pages and photolithographing them, the appropriation should be available as early as April 30, to avoid interruption in the publication of the Gazette.

Very respectfully,

J. W. BABSON,
In charge of Gazette.

The Commissioner.

I confess I do not see how this deficiency occurs in the light of that letter, but proceeding upon the sublime faith of my friend from Connecticut, I do not know that there is any ground to object to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 122, after the word "domain," to strike out "to be used" and insert "and;" so as to read:

For the expenses of the commission on the codification of existing laws relating to the survey and disposition of the public domain, and for the completion of such codification, the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for that purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "purpose," in line 124, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That said commission shall complete the same and make their final report on or before February 1, 1881.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have that explained. I do not exactly understand what it means. It is, first, legislation on an appropriation bill, and in a deficiency bill. This is "for the expenses of the commission on the codification of existing laws relating to the survey and disposition of the public domain, and for the completion of such codification, the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for that purpose: Provided, That said commission shall complete the same and make their final report on or before February 1st, 1881." No doubt the Senator from Connecticut can tell us what the state of this commission is, and how it is that this deficiency has occurred, because my purpose is absolutely serious to ascertain, so far as I can, in order to guide my vote, how it happens that in every branch of the Government there turn out to be these special deficiencies. Very likely this is all right, but I think the Senate ought to know how it happens, and why it is, if it does happen, that this legislative limitation is imposed upon this appropriation? If this money is due to anybody in order to carry out the obligations of the Government, it ought to be paid without any condition at all. If it means to say that this money thus due shall not be paid unless certain work which may or may not be accomplished within that time shall be finished by a certain date, then it is another thing; and I think I am not out of order in asking for an explanation of it.

Mr. EATON. I do not think the Senator from Vermont is ever out of order. The commission created by the act of March 3, 1879, is composed of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the Director of the United States Geological Survey, and three civilians appointed by the President for certain purposes. Twenty thousand dollars was appropriated for them to go on in the prosecution of the duties devolved upon them. They now come before the committees of the Senate and the House and say that they cannot complete their work without an additional appropriation of somewhere from $12,000 to $15,000. If it was worth while to begin the work, it is worth while to complete the work, and therefore with great care your committee have said:

For the expenses of the commission on the codification of existing laws relating to the survey and disposition of the public domain—and for the completion of such codification, the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for that purpose: Provided, That said commission shall complete the same and make their final report on or before February 1, 1881.

Striking out the words "to be used"—

We are assured that it can be done probably for less than $15,000, that it can be finished by the 1st of February, and that it is absolutely necessary to complete the work. Therefore the committee ask that this appropriation may be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask what the nature of these expenses is? Are they salaries, or are they expenses of printing publications, the employment of clerks, or of somebody to do the work that is imposed on these commissioners?

Mr. EATON. I take it, first, that three gentlemen receive $10 a day while actually engaged, and also their traveling expenses. Next, I suppose there is a clerk that belongs to this establishment. So I suppose they have gone on and expended their $20,000 of the money that has been already appropriated and that they require so much more in order to complete the work, estimating the work in the future from the extent of the work in the past.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there any communication from the head of the Department on the subject?

Mr. EATON. No communication.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We do not know then how this deficiency has occurred. I suppose the regular appropriation bill of a year ago provided what was thought to be necessary for this purpose, and I do not understand upon what principle of law it is that two of these commissioners, who are officials, are to have extra compensation.

Mr. ALLISON. They do not have extra compensation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They certainly ought not to have it.

Mr. ALLISON. I know that the two officials connected with the Government are expressly prohibited from receiving compensation other than their expenses, and I think the law either directs or, if it does not direct, it contemplates or did contemplate that this commission should make a trip into the mountainous regions of our country and make an examination with reference to the classification of the public lands—

Mr. EDMUNDS. In order to see how to codify the laws!

Mr. ALLISON. They were to classify the public lands as to their being arable or otherwise, and make a report as to the best method of disposing of the public domain; and in the mountain region, the mineral region, to ascertain the lands susceptible of irrigation, and so on. They have made a partial report, and I understand that it lies on our tables here, a long bill of one hundred and fifteen or one hundred and twenty sections, covering various provisions of our present public-land laws; but that is only a partial report, and they want to complete their work.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator be kind enough to give me a reference to the statute creating this commission?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Connecticut read a portion of it. It is in the last sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. TELLER. Let the law be read.

Mr. ALLISON. I have it before me. The whole of it is found in the sundry civil appropriation bill of last year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Can the Senator give me the page?

Mr. ALLISON. I cannot give the Senator the page of the statute-book; but I have the act before me. It provides:

That the commission shall consist of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the Director of the United States Geological Survey, and three civilians, to be appointed by the President, who shall receive a per diem compensation of $10 for each day while actually engaged, and their traveling expenses; and neither the Commissioner of the General Land Office nor the Director of the United States Geological Survey shall receive other compensation for their services upon said commission than their salaries, respectively, except their traveling expenses, while engaged on said duties; and it shall be the duty of this commission to report to Congress within one year from the time of its organization: first, a codification of the present laws relating to the survey and disposition of the public domain; second, a system and standard of classification of public lands; as arable, irrigable, timber, pasturage, swamp, coal, mineral lands, and such other classes as may be deemed proper, having due regard to humidity of climate, supply of water for irrigation, and other physical characteristics; third, a system of land parceling surveys adapted to the economic uses of the several classes of lands; and, fourth, such recommendations as they may deem wise in relation to the best method of disposing of the public lands of the western portion of the United States to actual settlers.

That is the law under which the commission was created. They spent, I understand, some four or five months during the last summer and fall in the western portion of our country, making such examinations as would enable them to report on these various topics. They have not yet made a final report. This sum has been expended in a worthy object if the results shall prove to be beneficial. I do not know whether they will or not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why have they not made the report within the year provided by law?

Mr. ALLISON. The year has not yet expired.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On the 3d of March.

Mr. ALLISON. They have made a partial report, but not a full report, and the Committee on Appropriations in allowing this appropriation thought it wise to compel them to make a final report within a given time.

Mr. PADDOCK. Do I understand the Senator to say that their year of service has expired already?

Mr. ALLISON. I think so.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It has expired.

Mr. PADDOCK. Is this appropriation one to supply a deficiency, or is it to continue the commission?

Mr. ALLISON. My understanding is that if the commission was to be cut off now there would be perhaps very little, if any, deficiency; but their work is not complete, and if it is to be completed there must be an additional appropriation to run them over the present fiscal year, and the committee has added a limitation as to the time when the work shall be done.

Mr. PADDOCK. Does the appropriation itself or the manner in which it is expressed give the authority to the commission to continue? Does it give it life?

Mr. ALLISON. So I understand.

Mr. PADDOCK. I have not read the provision. I should feel disposed to object to it otherwise.

Mr. TELLER. In answer to the Senator from Nebraska let me say, it is here provided—

That said commission shall complete the same and make their final report on or before February 1, 1881.

This commission, organized as it was by a provision in an appropriation bill, I thought fit at the time to vote against. I voted against it on the general principle that it was but an attempt to interfere with the land laws of the United States which have been in force and are thoroughly understood by both the people and the officials all over the country. I thought I saw in it an effort to change the entire system of public surveys, an effort to abrogate and abandon all the statutes on that subject and introduce an entire new set, and I believed that the experience from the foundation of the Government up to the present time with reference to the disposal of the public lands and to their survey, &c., was of some account. I did not believe then that this commission would be of any benefit to the public, but on the contrary I believed it might be a great disadvantage.

The commission was appointed, and I will not say anything against the personnel of the commission, because if there was a commission to be appointed I think its members were as competent men as we could have expected would be selected for that purpose. Some members of the commission at least were very suitable for that work, if the work was to be done.

The commission, having organized themselves as provided by the statute, I believe, traveled all over the country. I do not remember how long they were gone, but I think they must have been gone at least three or four months from the city of Washington, going clear down into Arizona, all over California and Colorado and other sections of the western country. They returned here and submitted, as the Senator from Iowa says, a partial report, which has not yet been printed and laid on the table, but I have the bill which is the work of this commission, containing one hundred and thirty-four pages of printed matter. It substantially abolishes the present system; it introduces not only an entirely new system of surveys, but of the disposition of the public lands, and while containing a great many things in it that are undoubtedly beneficial and which would probably be very advantageous if they could be incorporated in with the other statutes, there is a great deal in it that would be a serious disadvantage to the people of the West at least if it should be adopted.

There were two purposes for which it was said this commission was to be appointed. The first was to prepare—what it was supposed that the Senate and House had not the capacity to do—a bill for the disposition of the public lands or the surveys of the public lands. That was the first business that we intrusted to this commission. I do not know why it was supposed that in the House and in the Senate there might not have been ability enough and acquaintance enough with this subject to have presented all the laws that were necessary to cure the defects in the existing statutes. The House of Representatives by a very decided majority and the Senate voted to intrust this work to this commission.

Then, in addition to that, they were to codify the land laws of the country. That is what they have not yet done; and if there was any real object and if there was any advantage to be derived from the appointment of this commission it must consist in the codification of these laws. The codification of the land laws was desirable, I admit, but the entire uprooting and destruction of the whole land system was not desired by the people most interested and ought not to have been done; but of that I suppose it will be time enough for us to speak when the bill is submitted for our consideration, if it ever shall be.

Now, I suppose the real object of this appropriation is to enable the commission to codify the land laws. If so, I am in favor of allowing them to do that. They have done what harm they can do I think; and if there is any good to result from this commission, it is still to come; it is still with reference to this codification if any good comes at all. It was desirable perhaps to classify the lands; but that was a simple question. It could have been easily done. There were bills introduced here and buried in the Committee on Public Lands to my certain knowledge that were drawn by men as familiar with the question of arid lands and of timbered lands, of irrigable lands and non-irrigable lands as any member of the commission could be either before they made this extended trip or after. There is a propriety in a division of the lands into these different classes. It can be done readily and without any expense to the Government by the surveyors-general of the different States and Territories where public land remains. There was no necessity for this commission then nor now, unless to codify the land laws. They have commenced, as I understand, upon the codification; they have partially completed it; and it has cost the Government of the United States a very large amount of money. In my judgment, inasmuch as we have made, I think, the first mistake in creating the commission and have spent this money, it would be wise now to allow them to go on and present the codification.

I do not know exactly what is to be done with the codification. I do not know what necessity there is of the codification if the bill they propose becomes a law, because they have uprooted every statute, and, using ordinary language, they have wiped out all vestige of former laws and have incorporated the whole thing in this bill. If this bill becomes a law there is no necessity of the codification; but if the bill does not become a law, there may be some propriety in codifying the land laws as they now exist, because some of them are repeated in one statute and some repeated in another, and some of them appear to be antagonistic to others, and a fair revision and codification would, I have no doubt, be beneficial to all concerned.

Mr. CARPENTER. I believe I have the consent of the Senator from Connecticut to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. EATON. I hope this particular matter may be ended before we have an executive session.

Mr. CARPENTER. I withdraw the motion.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARPENTER. Now I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ASHEVILLE, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. RANSOM. I ask the Senate to take up, before the doors are actually closed, the bill (S. No. 1293) to provide for the erection of a public building at Asheville, North Carolina; which, I think, will provoke no debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase, at private sale or by condemnation, in pursuance of the statute of the State of North Carolina, a suitable lot of ground in the town of Asheville, North Carolina, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable brick or stone building, with a fire-proof vault extending to each story, for the use and accommodation of the courts of the United States, post-office, and other offices of the Government, and appropriates $75,000 therefor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECOMMITTAL OF A BILL.

Mr. BRUCE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. No. 1017) granting an increase of pension to Jerry Robinson, late commissary-sergeant First Regiment United States Colored Troops, was indefinitely postponed, and that it be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions, in order to give an opportunity for filing additional testimony.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the motion made by the Senator from Mississippi? The Chair hears no objection. The vote will be reconsidered and the bill recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty-four minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 30, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. SAMUEL DOMER, of Washington, District of Columbia.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I call for the regular order.

Mr. GOODE. I hope the gentleman from Mississippi will yield for one minute that I may ask the House to concur in an amendment to a House joint resolution.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I am asked by several gentlemen to yield, and will do so for a few minutes.

DOUBLE-TURRETED MONITORS.

Mr. GOODE. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution (H. R. No. 237) directing the Secretary of the Navy to organize a board to inquire into the present condition of the double-turreted monitors and the propriety and cost of completing said vessels, with an amendment by the Senate, be taken from the Speaker's table. I desire to move concurrence in the Senate amendment.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

In line four strike out the words "none of whom shall be of a lower grade than captain."

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. GOODE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FUNDING BILL.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I desire to give notice that as soon as the appropriation bill now pending in Committee of the Whole and the Indian appropriation bill shall have been disposed of I shall ask the House to consider the funding bill until the final vote upon it is reached.

ALCOHOLIC LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. BREWER. I ask unanimous consent to present a petition one hundred and eighty-eight yards in length and signed by 33,484 ladies belonging to the Ladies' National Temperance Union in the several States and Territories and in the District of Columbia, praying for a commission of inquiry on the alcoholic liquor traffic and for such legislation as will prohibit the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors within the United States. I also ask unanimous consent that the petition be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It is very short.

There being no objection, the petition was received, referred to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, and ordered to be printed, without the names, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The petition is as follows:

Petition of the Woman's National Christian Temperance Union, for relief and inquiry.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

We, citizens of these United States, in view of the terrible destructions inflicted on our people by the liquor traffic, beseech you to exert your utmost power, both by legislation and constitutional amendment, to forever prohibit the importation, manufacture, and sale of alcoholic drinks throughout the country, and that you will appoint the commission of inquiry prayed for by the National Temperance Society.

METRIC SYSTEM.

Mr. STEPHENS. I ask unanimous consent to present to the House for reference to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures the petition of about 3,000 scientists of this country upon the subject of the establishment of the metric system. The petition is brief, and I ask that, without the names, it be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The petition is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The undersigned, members of the American Metrological Society and others, beg leave respectfully to represent:

That the metric system of weights and measures has been established by law and is now in general use in nearly every country of continental Europe, the only important exception being the Russian Empire;

That, on this continent, the same system has been adopted by Brazil, Mexico, and the republics of Central and South America generally;

That in Great Britain the use of the system has, since 1864, been made legal for all business transactions involving the use of quantities; that its adoption for exclusive use in that country is strongly advocated by importers and persons engaged in commerce, as well as by many manufacturers, professional men, and others, and that it is there, as well as in our own country, commonly employed by men of science in their computations and investigations;

That in the United States, moreover, by acts passed in 1866, the use of that system is permissive in business transactions, and the Postmaster-General is authorized to employ it exclusively for postal purposes, while by the international postal convention of 1874 it is already used in the Post-Office for the foreign correspondence of the country; that a wide-spread interest has been awakened among our citizens in recent years on the subject of metrological reform, which has manifested itself in the adoption, by many scientific and educational associations, and by organizations of the scientific professions, of resolutions favoring the introduction of the metric system for exclusive use into the country, and by the formation of societies expressly to promote this object;

That at the last session of the Forty-fifth Congress a report was presented by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures of the House of Representatives, recommending the passage of an act permitting and requiring the use of the metric denominations of weight and measure in the custom-houses of the United States, and prescribing simple rules for the assessment of duties upon metric invoices, which recommendation was renewed by the same committee at the special session of the Forty-sixth Congress, held early in the year 1879, but has hitherto remained unacted upon; and that such an enactment would, in the belief of the undersigned, be a wise measure of public policy, inasmuch as it would sensibly relieve the laboriousness of transactions with the custom-houses, while it would at the same time contribute to familiarize our people with the details of a metrological system which is now in general use in other portions of the civilized world, and thus to facilitate the ultimate assimilation of our own system to that which is evidently destined to be the common system of all mankind.

In view of these considerations, your memorialists respectfully pray that the attention of your honorable body may be early directed to the recommendations of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures above referred to, and that it may seem good to you to give effect to those recommendations by the speedy enactment of a law authorizing and requiring the use of the metric denominations of weight and measure in the custom-houses of the United States and defining the mode in which duties may be assessed on metric invoices of merchandise imported through the same.

And your memorialists will ever pray, &c.

REPORT ON ZOOLOGY.

Mr. MONROE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was read, and referred to the Joint Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That there be printed at the Government Printing Office, with the necessary illustrations, 5,000 copies of the Report on Zoology, volume 14, of the final reports of the United States Geological Survey of the Territories, by F. V. Hayden, 3,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 for the Department of the Interior.

SURVEY OF CONNECTICUT RIVER.

Mr. PHELPS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 500 additional copies of the report of General G. K. Warren, of the Engineer Department of the United States, on the survey of the Connecticut River below Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, made in November, 1879, with a view to the permanent improvement of the channel of said river, together with the maps which accompany the same, be printed for the use of the Engineer Department and of Congress.

PROTECTION OF INDIANS.

Mr. O'NEILL, by unanimous consent, presented a preamble and resolution passed at a meeting held March 23, at the Third Reform church, Philadelphia, Rev. A. R. Van Nest, D. D., pastor, asking the protection of the laws for the person and property of the American Indians, that individual titles to their lands in fee-simple may be authorized by law, and that a law for the return of the Ponca tribe to their lands in Dakota may be immediately passed; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

CHARLES OLIVIER DUCLOZEL.

Mr. ACKLEN. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. No. 2004) to confirm the title of Charles Olivier Duclozel to certain lands in the State of Louisiana, with an amendment by the Senate, for consideration at this time.

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the Senate will be read, after which objections, if any, will be in order.

The amendment of the Senate was read.

Mr. DUNNELL. Inasmuch as the amendment of the Senate which has been read is virtually a new bill adopted by the Senate as a substitute for the House bill, I think it should go to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Louisiana consent to that reference?

Mr. ACKLEN. No, sir; I prefer to let the bill remain on the Speaker's table.

INCOMPLETE VOLUMES OF CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. WARD, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Whereas the proprietors of the late Globe newspaper sold to the Government for $100,000 a number of bound and unbound volumes of the Congressional Globe, which are incomplete and worthless, except as waste paper, unless a large sum of money shall be expended in reprinting a sufficient number of volumes to make complete sets: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be directed to report a bill to this House providing for reprinting a sufficient number of volumes to make five hundred complete sets, to be distributed as may hereafter be directed by law, or to direct the Public Printer to advertise and sell the said odd volumes at the best prices that can be obtained therefor, and to place the proceeds thereof in the Treasury to the credit of the public printing and binding.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I move that the morning hour be dispensed with.

Mr. REAGAN. I call for a division.

Mr. GARFIELD. The object of the motion is that we may go on with the appropriation bill. Let us do that.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 105, noes 47.

So (two-thirds having voted in the affirmative) the morning hour was dispensed with.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. CONVERSE in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3035) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next clause of the bill.

The Clerk read the following:

COMMERCIAL AGENCIES.

SCHEDULE C.

Saint Paul de Loando; Levuka.

SCHEDULE B.

San Juan del Norte.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move to insert after that portion of the bill just read that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the salaries as herein provided for all officers of the consular and diplomatic service shall be the only ones authorized by law, and that no allowance or compensation of any kind whatsoever in addition to the stated salary shall be paid to or received by any of said officers; and all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this proviso be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. HAWLEY. I make a point of order upon that amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is against the rule.

Mr. HAWLEY. It changes existing law.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It does not; it simply declares that the salaries provided in this bill shall constitute the only salary, compensation, or pay of any of these officers.

Mr. HAWLEY. It proposes to change the existing law.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If it does it is not amenable to the point of order, for it retrenches to the amount of the compensation outside of the provisions of this bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does the gentleman know there is any outside of it?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do, and so does my friend from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.] The object of this amendment is to put a stop to the system of double compensation, all blind compensation that is not shown upon the face of the law. Here are a lot of foreign representatives provided with salaries, and those salaries are arranged and gauged according to what Congress deems to be the value of their services. That should be their compensation, and it should be all their compensation.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from Kentucky is speaking to the merits of the amendment, not to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] state again his point of order?

Mr. HAWLEY. My point of order is that the amendment proposes to change existing law and is not reported by any committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. What law does it change?

Mr. HAWLEY. It provides the repeal of "all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the proviso." The gentleman can tell better than I can what laws it will repeal.

Mr. BLACKBURN. What laws does it profess to change?

Mr. HAWLEY. All laws in conflict with it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is, if there be any. The amendment does not determine that there are any such laws.

Mr. HAWLEY. If there are no such laws, then the amendment simply provides that an officer shall not have any money contrary to law, which is now the existing law.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That would not prevent the consideration of the amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. In addition to the fees fixed in this bill there are certain items of pay, for instance, fees which consuls are allowed to retain, and which increase the amounts named in this bill. That, however, is the result of the law, and this amendment is a proposition to change the law, and as stated by the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY,] not coming from a committee it is clearly amenable to the point of order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does not the gentleman know that certain consular representatives of this Government are allowed to carry on other professions or businesses regulated and determined by the amount of their pay under this bill, from which they receive fees, as notaries public and what not, fees for services in an official capacity altogether different from their consular representative capacity?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do, but that is not the question. The simple proposition now is whether or not this amendment changes existing law.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am willing to let the Chair rule upon that point.

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly, and until that is done the merits of the proposition are not before the committee for discussion.

Mr. BUCKNER. A word on the point of order, which is that the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] is not in order, and does not come up to the requirements of our rule. It is not sufficient, as I understand, that there shall be a change in existing law, in order to make an amendment in order. A change of existing law is prohibited by our rule, unless it is connected with a retrenchment of expenditures, which retrenchment must appear upon the face of the amendment itself. Now, if the gentleman from Kentucky can point to any existing law which would give to these officers other perquisites than the salaries provided by this bill, and his amendment changes that law so as to take away those perquisites, then it will be clearly within the rule. But if he cannot do that, if it is a mere matter of conjecture or surmise, then the amendment is not in order.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. One word. It is known to members of this House that under certain circumstances and at certain points consuls are allowed to take fees for making deeds, discharging seamen, &c. If this amendment shall prevail, all that will be cut off, and they will not be allowed any such compensation. To that extent the amendment would change the law, and is therefore subject to a point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. There are other fees.

Mr. DUNNELL. In China, for instance, consuls exercise judicial functions, and under the law are authorized for the exercise of those functions to receive and retain fees, without making any return of them, such fees as come to them in their judicial capacity. For instance, if they certify to a deed they are allowed a fee under the law, which is part of their compensation.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, the law now provides that certain consuls may retain as part of their salaries certain fees received by them in the discharge of the duties of their offices. The amendment contemplates a reduction of the salaries of these officers to that extent. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is in order as a retrenchment of expenditures.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BLACKBURN, there were—ayes 38, noes 71; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, and Mr. BLACKBURN were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 36, noes 73. So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For interpreters, guards, and other expenses at the consulates at Constantinople, Smyrna, Cairo, Jerusalem, and Beirut, in the Turkish dominions, $3,000.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move to amend by adding after the clause just read the following:

Provided, That all officers hereinbefore mentioned shall render quarterly statements to the Secretary of the Treasury, under oath, of all fees, emoluments, or compensation that may be received by them for any service performed, whether the same be in their official or other capacity.

Mr. FRYE. Would it not be well for the gentleman from Kentucky to put in all his amendments at this time?

Mr. BLACKBURN. It would be well for the gentleman from Maine if he would vote for a few of them.

Mr. FRYE. We will vote them all down.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, rose.

A MEMBER. Do not make a speech on it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. As I understand, this amendment includes all the officers provided for by this bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes; I meant it to do so.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Very well. I make the point of order that it changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. HAWLEY. It adds to expenses.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I would like the gentleman from Mississippi to point out any law that prohibits the making of these reports.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. There is no law requiring such reports; and this amendment proposes to enact such a law.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It does not "change" any "existing law." That is the language of the rule.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. It seems to me it would be very strange indeed to require every officer in the consular and diplomatic service to make quarterly returns to the Treasury of the United States of every dollar received by him.

Mr. SPARKS. Why not?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Why not? Why, you give to some of your ministers abroad $17,500 salary—

A MEMBER. Only four of them.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. To others you give $12,000. Do you propose to require these gentlemen at the end of every quarter to make a report of the amount of fees they have received when the law fixes their salaries? Why, sir, it looks to me as if you will have to establish a new bureau with accounting officers for the purpose of settling these accounts if the amendment should be adopted. I see no necessity for it. If the amendment were intended to apply only to this particular paragraph I would have no special objection to it.

Mr. SPARKS. What harm can there be in requiring these reports? If these officials of the Government receive fees and collect money, why not require them to make report of such sums; and if such report is made, why should it not be made under oath, so as to insure accuracy?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Why not require members of Congress to report quarterly the manner in which they have expended their salaries, or to report any other private transactions.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi insist on the point of order?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is not in order, as the existing law does not require these reports to be made.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CONVERSE reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3035) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back without amendment and with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD some remarks on this bill.

There being no objection, leave was granted. [See Appendix.]

The question then recurred on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. This being a general appropriation bill, the rule requires that the question on its passage shall be taken by yeas and nays. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 191, nays 15, not voting 86; as follows:

During the roll-call
Mr. STEELE said: I believe I will change my vote, Mr. Speaker, from "no" to "ay;" I do not like the bill much, but I will swallow it. [Laughter.]

The following pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk.
Mr. BOUCK with Mr. MCKINLEY. If Mr. MCKINLEY were present, Mr. BOUCK would vote "no."
Mr. MULLER with Mr. MILLER.
Mr. EVINS with Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio.
Mr. BACHMAN with Mr. GODSHALK.
Mr. KILLINGER with Mr. ACKLEN.
Mr. FORT with Mr. O'BRIEN.
Mr. DICK with Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia.
Mr. PIERCE with Mr. KIMMEL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KIMMEL] is detained at home by sickness.

Mr. WHITTHORNE with Mr. KETCHAM.
Mr. EINSTEIN with Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey.
Mr. HEILMAN with Mr. ACKDWEIL.
Mr. KLOTZ with Mr. MITCHELL.
Mr. HUTCHINS with Mr. DWIGHT.
Mr. STEPHENS with Mr. HAMMOND, of New York.
Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois, on all political questions, except on a question of quorum, from and after the 20th, during the leave of absence granted to Mr. MILES.
Mr. RICHMOND with Mr. PRESCOTT until further notice.
Mr. O'CONNOR with Mr. BOWMAN for one week from March 29 on all political questions and questions involving the tariff.
Mr. LORING with Mr. SPEER for one week.
Mr. SHERWIN with Mr. WRIGHT.
Mr. SMITH, of Georgia, with Mr. WILBER.
Mr. HOSTETLER with Mr. HERR.
Mr. BALLOU with Mr. SMITH, of New Jersey.
Mr. WELLS with Mr. COWGILL on all political questions from Tuesday the 30th of March until Tuesday the 6th of April, both days inclusive.

Mr. DUNN with Mr. SAPP.
Mr. REED with Mr. MYERS on this vote.
Mr. STEPHENS. I paired with Mr. HAMMOND, of New York, on all political questions only. I did not consider this as a political question and therefore voted.

Mr. CALKINS. I am paired with Mr. SPRINGER, of Illinois, in the same way.

Mr. DWIGHT. I am paired on all political questions; and not considering this as a political question, I have voted.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I was informed that I was announced as having been paired.

The SPEAKER. No such announcement was made.
Mr. SMITH, of New Jersey. I am recorded as being paired. I do not understand this to be a political question, and have voted.

Mr. ATHERTON. I was paired yesterday with my colleague, [Mr. BUTTERWORTH,] but I see that he did not vote, and I ask the Clerk to examine the pairs to see whether the pairs extended beyond yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The pairs are recorded each day, but the clerks have no record here of the pair referred to by the gentleman. It may be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The Chair is informed by the reading clerks that where members are paired beyond the day, they keep them; but where they are only for a day, they are not kept, as they go immediately into the RECORD.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLYMER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations I beg leave to report a bill (H. R. No. 5523) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, accompanied by a report. I ask that the bill and report be printed, and that the same be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and I further beg leave to give notice that I shall, on Thursday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal, move to dispense with the morning hour with a view to proceeding to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. CONGER. All points of order are reserved on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will observe the notice of the gentleman.

STAR-ROUTE DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back to the House House bill No. 4736, providing for a deficiency in the appropriation for the transportation of mails on star routes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto; and am directed to recommend non-concurrence in the Senate amendments.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let the Senate amendments be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky will be kind enough to send the engrossed bill to the desk.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have sent for the bill and will have it here in a moment.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—BRADLEY VS. SLEMONS.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the House now proceed to the consideration of the contested-election case of Bradley against Slemons. That case was reported three weeks ago, and several different times have been set for the consideration of it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the matter in connection with the star-route service will be first disposed of. It can be done by a single vote.

Mr. SAWYER. This contested-election case will take but a very short time.

STAR-ROUTE DEFICIENCY BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Senate amendments will now be read.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky what his proposition is in reference to these amendments?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The committee recommend non-concurrence in them. And further, Mr. Speaker, it is not desired by the Committee on Appropriations to ask, as a matter of formal courtesy, to have a committee of conference appointed; but reporting back the bill with the amendments thereto by the Senate, to have it sent to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and there discussed and debated, so that the House may determine by its vote in the committee whether the amendments of the Senate shall be concurred in, and if not, then a committee of conference to be appointed, and the conferees of the House will go to the conference under instructions of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri, however, rises to a question of higher privilege, touching the right of a member to his seat.

Mr. WHITE. We certainly have a right to have the amendments read. The country is suffering for this bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Allow me to say a word.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to press his motion?

Mr. BLOUNT. Can the gentleman from Missouri take the gentleman from Kentucky off the floor to make that motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not allow him to take the gentleman from Kentucky off the floor. The bill to which the gentleman referred was not at hand, and while waiting the gentleman from Missouri submitted his motion. The Chair, however, recognizes the motion of the gentleman from Missouri as one of privilege.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I recognize the higher privilege of the motion submitted by the gentleman from Missouri, and I am willing, as I know the Committee on Appropriations is willing, to deal in exact fairness with the House in reference to the question of disagreement between the House and Senate on this star-route bill. I report it under instructions from the Committee on Appropriations. That committee has all the testimony which has been taken by the subcommittee on this deficiency. It was ordered to be printed for the use of the House. I was assured that it would be here and upon the desk of every member this morning, but I find that it has not been sent up from the Printing Office, though I am now told that it will be here during the course of the day. Such is the importance and necessity for a prompt disposition of this postal-deficiency question that I think the House will agree with me and the Committee on Appropriations that it is advisable to seek the most expeditious and early settlement of the question. The Committee on Appropriations have had the printed testimony taken by the sub-committee for several days in their hands, and the House, I hope, will be in possession of it some time during the day. I am perfectly ready, and the Committee on Appropriations is ready, to go on with the debate at any time in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. If, on the contrary, it be the preference of this House to consider the matter suggested by the gentleman from Missouri, the Committee on Appropriations will be content to take this up to-morrow morning under a motion to dispense with the morning hour immediately after the reading of the Journal, with a view to the settlement of the differences between the two Houses.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to make an inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to ask if it would be in order after the Senate amendments are read to move to concur in the same.

The SPEAKER. That would be in order.

Mr. STONE. I am authorized by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky, however, says that he reports the bill for reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. PAGE. Is that proper?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CONGER. If the amendments are read to the House and the House desires to concur, can it not vote down the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the report for reference to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do, and I point out that under the rule the amendments must of necessity go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WEAVER. Do I understand the gentleman from Kentucky that he is willing to have the House consider his report to-morrow?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am, if the House does not go on with it today.

Mr. COX. There is a special order already assigned for to-morrow—the consideration of the census bill.

The SPEAKER. The suggestion is that the report of the Committee on Appropriations be considered to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal. That, however, will have to be preceded on to-morrow by a motion to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. BLACKBURN. So I stated; and if the House shall not dispense with the morning hour the Committee on Appropriations will insist on taking this bill up at the expiration of the morning hour. I desire to say the Committee on Appropriations is ready to go on now or to allow the printed testimony to come in to-day and to proceed to-morrow morning immediately after the reading of the Journal if the morning hour shall be dispensed with, and, failing that, at the expiration of the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The understanding seems to be perfect, and the Chair will now recognize the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. SAWYER.]

Mr. PAGE. What is the understanding?

The SPEAKER. That this bill shall come up to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal, provided two-thirds dispense with the morning hour; if not, then immediately after the morning hour.

Mr. COX. I object.

Mr. PAGE. Will it be in order then to move to concur in the Senate amendments?

The SPEAKER. It will not; because the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] insists on sending the bill with the Senate amendments, under the rules of the House, to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. COX. I object to any arrangement unless we dispose of the census bill to-morrow. It has been assigned as a special order for to-morrow after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York had better ask unanimous consent to have his special order, the census bill, made a continuous order. It will then come up immediately after the disposition of the star-route bill.

Mr. WHITE. What is the order to which the gentleman from New York is referring?

The SPEAKER. The Senate bill as to the census.

Mr. COX. I have no objection to the arrangement suggested by the Chair.

Mr. SPARKS. What is that arrangement?

The SPEAKER. There is a special order for the consideration to-morrow of the census bill in charge of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.] That would, of course, be interrupted by the consideration to-morrow of the star-route bill. The gentleman from New York asks that the order for to-morrow may be made continuous, so that the census bill may come up after the star-route bill is disposed of.

Mr. SPARKS. Are there not special orders ahead of the special order of the gentleman from New York?

The SPEAKER. If there are they will have to come up in their order.

Mr. GARFIELD. Whatever is done about the census bill should be done immediately before the blanks are sent out.

Mr. ATKINS. I suggest that the gentleman from New York have the privilege of calling up the bill now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks that there be a continuous order for the consideration of the census bill immediately after the star-route bill is disposed of.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I object.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from Rhode Island, I understand, wishes to speak for fifteen minutes on the census bill. I am quite willing to agree to that and I do not think he will object to the arrangement.

Mr. McLANE. I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. WEAVER. I object to the present consideration of the census bill. I desire that we shall go on with the consideration of the election case.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman from New York does not ask for the present consideration of the bill, but that it may hold its place as a continuing order.

The SPEAKER. The proposition is that the census bill shall hold its place as a continuing order. The Chair hears no objection.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—BRADLEY VS. SLEMONS.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the House do now proceed to the consideration of the contested-election case of Bradley vs. Slemons, from the second congressional district of Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAWYER. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. WEAVER. I think it will be sufficient that the two resolutions be read, the majority and the minority resolutions.

Mr. SAWYER. I only desire the reading of the resolutions.

The Clerk read the resolution of the committee, as follows:

Resolved, That William F. Slemons is entitled to retain the seat he now occupies as Representative from the second congressional district in the State of Arkansas in the Forty-sixth Congress.

The Clerk also read the minority resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the seat now occupied by William F. Slemons as a Member of Congress from the second congressional district of the State of Arkansas in the Forty-sixth Congress be, and the same is hereby, declared vacant.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SAWYER] who represents the majority will indicate to the Chair what he proposes in regard to the debate on the resolutions.

Mr. SAWYER. I do not desire to make any remarks at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair then recognizes the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WEAVER,] who has submitted the views of the minority. The gentleman from Iowa yields, the Chair understands, to the contestant.

Mr. WEAVER. The understanding in the committee was that the contestant should be allowed to address the House in his own behalf. I now ask for him that privilege.

The SPEAKER. For one hour.

Mr. WEAVER. And longer if necessary.

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY, (the contestant.) I desire to return my sincere thanks to the members of this House for the courtesy which they have extended to me in that they have allowed me to speak for myself, and not only for myself but in vindication of the sacred rights of twenty thousand sovereigns of Arkansas whom I am here to represent. I feel grateful for this privilege more from the fact that I have always been impressed with the idea that under the genius of our American institutions wherever the American citizen had rights involved of whatsoever kind there his voice had a right to be heard. There are to-day in South Arkansas twenty thousand men pursuing their civil avocations who have rights involved in this issue as sacred as those of the contestant or the contestee. And not only that; I want to say to the members of this House that I am here not merely to vindicate or gratify a personal ambition or aspiration which I may have to occupy a cane-bottomed chair in this House. I am here to represent interests involving issues sacred not to me alone, not to my posterity alone, not to the people of Arkansas alone, but to every American citizen, to every member of this House, to him, to his wife, to his children, and to his children's children from generation to generation.

The mere idea of occupying a seat on this floor is not what has impelled me to leave my home and make the sacrifices I have made and to endure the privations I have endured and to bear the burdens of anxiety which I have borne for the last four long months while seeking to obtain an adjudication of this question of law and of this question of fact. Sir, I have been impelled to that course from a sense of the duty I owe to my constituents, from my obligation to the sacred American Republic of which I am a subject and a citizen.

I am here to seek the adjudication of a question not between Bradley and Slemons, but a question involving rights and wrongs; a question by the decision of which the members of this House are to determine whether we are to perpetuate a republican form of government to our posterity or to hand them over bound hand and foot to anarchy and mob law. That is the question I am here to investigate and to ask you to adjudicate.

I understand that my time is limited, because in this House time is sacred. Gentlemen will pardon me when I say that the cause involved in this issue is more sacred than the time which is constantly frittered away in this House. My honor, my integrity, my future happiness do not depend upon my occupancy of a seat on this floor; that is the smallest item of consideration with me.

I am not here to persecute the contestee. I have not come here to claim anything that belongs to him in the way either of money or franchise. As I said before, I have come from a sense of duty. I could not do less than have come here when 20,000 men who elected me to a seat in this House by a majority of 8,000 votes demanded of me to come here and vindicate their rights. The whole matter had passed out of their hands and into my hands, and the law had provided a remedy for me by which I, and I alone, could vindicate the sacred rights of my constituents which had been trampled upon and trifled with.

I am not before you to-day to cringe to the feet of any political party on earth. I am not here to investigate a party question. I am here to spurn the thought of bowing down at the feet of any political shrine on God Almighty's green earth. I trust that I am addressing men that have risen to a higher plane and standard than to put on a party hoodwink through which to view a question of law and a question of fact.

I have sat here in this House and heard men administer their castigations to the party adjudications of the courts of the country. It has struck my mind that whenever we cease to have party legislation we will necessarily cease to have party adjudications in the courts. In your capacity as jurors to-day, under your oath, sworn to do your duty, you are to decide a question of law and fact on its merits, not who of the parties is a democrat, who is a republican, or who is a greenbacker. For I say it here to-day independently, and fearless of circumstances, that he who would vote for me or against me simply because of my party affiliations is a perjurer and unfit to occupy a seat in this House; that is, if he does violence to justice and overrides the law and the facts as they are established by the testimony in this case. I trust in God we have arrived at an age in American history when we can rise to higher grounds than those of party opinions and prejudices in the adjudication of sacred rights, involving not merely the right of an American citizen to a seat in the House of Representatives, but the most sacred right that has been baptized by the blood of the fathers and handed down to us, the right of an American citizen to exercise the right of suffrage and of the ballot. I am here to vindicate this proposition: that it is the right of an American citizen to have his vote cast untrammelled and unbiased; to have it honestly counted and to have it fairly returned for what it was counted; and that the country should abide by the result of the votes of a majority of the people in an election under the law and under the Constitution.

Now it may be astounding to this House to be informed that I am here to contest the seat of a member who was returned by a majority of 2,827 votes. Gentlemen, I have to disclose to you a more startling proposition than that. It is more astounding that a man who was elected by a majority of over 8,000 votes should have been counted out by 2,827 votes.

The contestee, whose face I now look on, knows as well as I know that my majority to this House, as shown by this testimony, and as can be shown by the entire district, exceeded 8,000 votes.

If I am allowed time I hope to show you the result. When this race was made there were twenty counties in that district. Since this election the democratic Legislature has added three democratic counties to the district. It was not safe at 2,827 majority, and the Legislature last January added the counties of Pike, Clark, and Hot Springs—three democratic counties—to make the district a safe democratic district.

Now the report of this committee is a most remarkable document. It has left barely enough vitality in me to exercise itself in one grand struggle in the grave for self-resurrection! That is all. [Laughter.] But so long as there is enough territory left to plant my feet upon in the effort to vindicate my rights and the rights of my people I will never succumb to the power and influence of a report, even a majority report, when I know that I am vindicating the right against the wrong.

I have never stopped to inquire where the popular voice was. It has been my maxim through life to ascertain what is right and then do it or die—unless I am prevented from doing it! [Laughter.] I am not quite prevented by this report.

There are three counties in which testimony was taken, and I will state the fact in brief. Gentlemen are aware that I was allowed only forty days in which to take testimony. Mr. Boutwell, in his marginal notes upon the revision of the statutes, has embodied what I think was never the intention of the law-maker. I do not mean to be immodest when I express my opinion that the forty days did not commence from the time of the service of the contestee. The law allows, requires, five days to serve witnesses, and I did not know on what day the contestee would serve me with his answer, so that I could have five days' service on the witnesses and be ready to utilize the first of the forty days as computed by Mr. Boutwell. But I have no quarrel with the law.

It has been denied here that the testimony in Chicot and Hempstead Counties was taken inside of forty days, because I never commenced taking testimony until the 18th of February, the answer of the contestee having been served on me the 30th of January. The contestee was serving here in Washington City as a member of the Forty-fifth Congress, and I was required by the statute to allow him reasonable time to attend the taking of the testimony by the most direct and reasonable route of travel, exclusive of Sundays, and to allow him one day for preparation. In the exercise of the fullest courtesy toward him, I gave him this time, never expecting that a technical advantage would be taken of my courtesy and kindness and plead against me. But "drowning men catch at straws."

I commenced to take this testimony on the 18th of February. I closed it on the 29th of March—within the forty days. His lawyers were present, entered their appearance, put him upon the record, and cross-examined my witnesses; then, after he had gone into court, tried his case, and found the testimony against him, his attorneys entered a protest against taking the testimony in those counties, after they had taken it themselves.

Now what about Chicot County? I will allude to it first. I have alleged in this contest that William F. Slemmons, the contestee, five days before this election hired a man, Richard A. Dawson, and sent him from Jefferson County into Chicot County, which is shown by the testimony of H. W. Graves to be one hundred and thirty miles from Pine Bluff, with some fraudulent printed posters, which were circulated two days before the election in that county, announcing Hon. John A. Williams, of Jefferson County, as a republican nominee for Congress, so as to deprive me of the votes of 1,800 republicans in that county pledged to my support. That is what I charge. Now let us see whether the charge is true. It is shown by the testimony of Mr. Williams himself that he was the judge of the circuit court in that district, residing in Pine Bluff, Jefferson County; that he was not a candidate for Congress; that he was not a nominee; that there had never been a convention; that he never heard of these posters until a week after the election; that he had not spoken to R. A. Dawson for eight months. It is shown by the testimony of S. H. Holland, sheriff of Chicot County, and H. W. Graves, clerk of that county, that Dawson two days before the election came from Jefferson County into Chicot and circulated fraudulent posters and tickets for Hon. John A. Williams as a republican nominee; and these posters were marked "Republican print," as if printed in the Republican office in Jefferson County. This is sworn to here, and sworn to by a democrat who voted for the contestee.

Samuel C. Ryan, one of the publishers of the Pine Bluff Press, a democratic paper, swears that he printed these posters himself at the instance of H. King White, a friend of Mr. Slemmons. Dan. M. Robinson, who was a printer in that office, swears that Mr. Slemmons was in Pine Bluff that week, and was in that office half a dozen times or more about that time. The first witness in this volume of testimony testifies that on Wednesday morning before the 5th day of November he saw William F. Slemmons, the contestee, and Richard A. Dawson standing on the platform of the depot in Pine Bluff in private conversation for several minutes; and Dawson went on the same train as the witness to Chicot County carrying these posters.

I am not going to argue this matter now; but I call attention to it because the committee say that if they believed Mr. Slemmons knew anything about this they would report a resolution to unseat him. I know that the committee is composed of honest and good men, and I am sorry they never found this out from the testimony. I shall show from the evidence that Mr. Slemmons knew about it and had it done in his own interest; and I will show before I am through that he admits this.

In Chicot County, if you will turn to the testimony of S. H. Holland, the sheriff, (for nine years, I mean to state the whole thing in brief,) he swears there were 1,800 republican voters in that county (it is a way down the Mississippi River, in the swamp) and between three and four hundred democratic voters. He swears in July before he was the chairman of the republican central committee, and that he gave the contestant, John M. Bradley, a written obligation or a promise, which was made to him by the republican party, that they would support the said John M. Bradley for Congress. That is what Holland swears; and he swears this is the number of votes. How does he know it? He says: "I have been president of the board of registration of this county. I have been sheriff for five years. I have been a member of the State senate. I have been chairman for nine years of the republican central committee." He ought to know all about it.

If you will turn to the testimony of H. W. Graves you will find he says that he canvassed the county in September. So does Holland. And he continues: "We found the republicans unanimous." That is Mr. Graves's language. He says we found the republicans unanimous for John M. Bradley in the election for Congress on the 5th of November. Every one testifies to the same fact.

Now, the election came on. Two days before the election Holland swears "Richard A. Dawson sent me"—but I want to read that. He swears that Dawson sent him some circulars and posters from Luna Landing, on the Mississippi River, in Arkansas. Here is Holland's letter:

LUNA LANDING, ARKANSAS, November 2, 1878—

You see when it was—

DEAR HOLLAND—

He was the sheriff of the county—

On the eve of the election—

Now listen to it and mark it well—the republicans have concluded to bring out a candidate. The circulars and tickets I send you will speak for themselves. I am sick, and will take boat to-night for Arkopolis, otherwise I most certainly should have come to the village. Do all you can. We think Bradley has made split enough—

You will find all along that I had a large democratic as well as a large republican vote added to my greenback vote—

We think Bradley has made split enough by proper work to get our men in. Regards to all. Do all you can. Would like to have seen you. Come up soon as possible.

Yours, as ever,

RICH. A. DAWSON.

That is the delectable man by whom these posters were sent, and yet the committee said he carried them there on his own responsibility. The clerk testifies that my vote in that county was 236; that out of the 1,800 republican votes to vote for me there were only 236. Slemons got, out of nearly 400 democratic votes, 151. I had no posters there to keep him back. It only shows he was not very popular with his own party. Mr. Williams received 90 votes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, Holland and Graves both swear that the Williams posters had a tendency to confuse people and keep them from the polls, and to keep those who went to the polls and who desired to vote for me from doing so. I have shown you these posters were sent in the interest of Mr. Slemons, as Dawson writes to Holland, "We think Bradley has made split enough by proper work to get our men in." These were colored votes; not all of them, but a large number of them.

I submit, then, this to you as a body of lawyers. Mr. Slemons, or whoever did this act, did it for purposes of his own. The committee in their report admit the act and they admit the purpose; that it was done with the intention of keeping me from getting those votes which were pledged to me. I did not get those votes and I submit to this House now whether a man who prevented me in this way from getting those votes is not estopped from asserting that these votes which were pledged to me were not cast for me by the influence of those posters. I submit to anybody whether the party who does an act with the intention of accomplishing a certain purpose, and that purpose is accomplished—whether that party who did the act for the purpose of keeping men from going to the polls and voting for me can charge they remained away from the polls for any other reason.

Then, sir, by this means I lost 1,564 votes in Chicot County, as shown by the testimony. But I want to say something more on that. The committee, in their kindness, have seen proper in the exercise of that kindness to allow me 600 in that county. I have never known where they got the idea from of allowing me 600. There is no rule of 600 in the testimony anywhere so far as Chicot County is concerned. Why they happened to fall upon the number 600 still remains a mystery. But the committee say they are willing to give me 600 in Chicot County.

Now, it is clear from the testimony, if they give me one vote they must give me 1,564 votes. Every one they take out of that number they must give some good reason for other than can be claimed from these fraudulent posters. I have shown by the testimony of Mr. Graves who said he was in the southern part of Chicot County that the posters and printed tickets with the name of Williams upon them led to confusion and were the means of keeping a great many republicans from the polls; that no votes were there cast for Williams; and witness asserted his belief that the posters announcing Williams as a candidate were a fraud.

Now, is this House going to let men occupy seats here who have been elected or claim to have been elected by any such fraud as that?

If I show to you Mr. Slemons in person did this thing, I look in your faces and ask you, as American statesmen, are you going to have fellowship in Congress with one who comes with his hands and head and body and soul covered with fraud all over in the procurement of his return to a seat in this House. Sam. C. Ryan says that he printed these posters in the Pine Bluff Press office; that he marked them "Republican print." He was asked, "Why did you do it?" He said, "I do not know why I did it; I suppose because it was in the copy." I have shown you that Slemons was in that office half a dozen times or more while this thing was being done.

Where were those posters carried to? Now, I want to show you gentlemen exactly what the testimony is in this respect. Ryan swears he carried them to the Planters' Hotel and left them there in a room. Then the question was asked him, "What room?" "I do not remember." "What was the number of the room?" "I do not remember." "Was Mr. Slemons stopping at the Planters' Hotel at that time?" "He was." "What room was he in?" "I do not know." "Was the room he occupied the one you left the posters in that night?" "I do not know." "Could you find the room you left them in?" "I do not know."

Just look at this, gentlemen. Here is a man giving this testimony in reference to a little bit of a two-story hotel that he knows every nook and corner of as well as your children know every nook and corner in your yards at home, and yet he says he does not know what room he carried these posters to.

Now, then, we traced these posters to the Planters' Hotel, and find that Slemons was at the Planters' Hotel at the same time, and we find that Slemons had the posters afterward, for the next morning he had the posters at the depot. [Laughter.] I ask you how he managed to get those posters to the depot?

The next morning Slemons and Dawson sent the posters into Chicot County, but I want the House now to see if possible how these posters ers got from the Planters' House to the depot. Is there one word of testimony in this regard that will show how they got there on the part of Slemons? He never has attempted to show before the committee in any way how he got them there. He never introduced Dawson to prove who gave him the posters, and he never attempted to show that there was any other Slemons man at the hotel except himself. What do you think of that? [Laughter.] What do you think of that, I ask you, and I ask all honorable gentlemen whether you are to be trifled with, and whether you are willing to accept the company of a man who is able and willing to perform such an act as that? Are you to be trifled with as members of Congress in this way? Are you to be content with this kind of electioneering and allow a man in this manner to battle his way into Congress and trifle with your intelligence and try to make you believe that those posters were conveyed by some angel from the Planters' House to the depot that night? [Laughter.]

Now, gentlemen, you have got the facts. Let us see what the facts are, and the pleadings about this. In the notice of my contest to him I stated:

Second. And for the further reason that you sent one Richard A. Dawson from Pine Bluff to Chicot County, one of the counties of said second congressional district, on Wednesday before the election aforesaid, with printed posters to put up in said county, and with tickets announcing one John A. Williams as the republican nominee for Congress from the said second congressional district, asking all good republicans to support him, by which fifteen hundred voters in said county were confused and did not vote in said election, who otherwise would have voted for me; all of which will be proven.

Now, let us see what Mr. Slemons answers to that:

The charge that in Chicot County the voters were confused by a proclamation sent by me, and that fifteen hundred who would have voted for you did not vote at all, is untrue, and I deny that any voters who wished to vote for you were deprived of that privilege.

That is the answer that the gentleman makes to the allegations made in my notice of contest. Now you see he did not deny the fact, for he admits that he sent the proclamation and the posters into that county. He makes no attempt to deny the fact alleged in that statement of mine, and I have just shown that in view of that admission he is estopped from the effect of his own act. Now, the effect of that act is to vitiate his election, and by that fact he is estopped under the law from denying the effect of his own deliberate act. The law presumes that when a man commits an act deliberately, willfully, and intentionally he intends all of the consequences of that act. Mr. Slemons knows that as well as any man in the world, and every lawyer on this floor knows it, and it never has been attempted to be denied, nor will Mr. Slemons attempt to deny it here, neither has he in any way attempted to disprove the consequences of that act. That being true, the presumption of law is incontrovertible, and he is estopped from denying the consequences of the act.

I desire, Mr. Speaker, to call special attention to this extract from the notice of contest in this connection, and I will read it again:

Second. And for the further reason that you sent one Richard A. Dawson from Pine Bluff to Chicot County, one of the counties of said second congressional district, on Wednesday before the election aforesaid, with printed posters to put up in said county, and with tickets announcing one John A. Williams as the republican nominee for Congress from the said second congressional district, asking all good republicans to support him, by which 1,500 voters in said county were confused and did not vote in said election, who otherwise would have voted for me; all of which will be proven.

The testimony shows that by this act I was deprived of 1,564 votes.

Now, then, I have lost 1,564 votes in that county by the act of Slemons himself. Once more—and after referring to that I am done with Chicot—the committee say if they knew Slemons and Dawson were talking on this subject on the platform they would not hesitate to unseat Slemons. What do you suppose they were talking about? Dawson was just starting on an errand for Slemons, a distance of one hundred and thirty miles. If your wife was about dying, and one of your neighbors should go one hundred and thirty miles for a doctor, and you were seen talking with him at sunrise, and after your conversation he was seen mounting his horse and starting, would anybody suppose you did not know where he was going and what business he was on? I put it to you as sensible men. I say it is trifling with your intelligence and trifling with your dignity and insulting to this branch of the American Congress to suppose otherwise.

But I pass from that. If you can afford to let Mr. Slemons sit with you in a seat thus obtained I am not hurt, posterity perhaps is not hurt, but I weep over the slain republican sentiment, bequeathed to me by the blood of my fathers and your fathers, that is slain by your act, and I will be helpless and powerless to furnish a remedy.

Now, sir, I come to Hempstead County. It is said in the report the testimony in regard to Hempstead County was taken out of due time—as it were, born out of due season. But Mr. Slemons's lawyer was there and put himself on the record, cross-examining every witness; and when the testimony showed that 554 men—listen to it—took Bradley tickets in their hands, marched up in a line to the ballot-box, had their names taken down in regular order, and demanded the right to vote for Bradley and were refused, then he entered a protest against taking the testimony in that county. That is the testimony in regard to Hempstead County: that 554 men in a line, shown to be legal voters in the township and county and State—in the two townships of Ozan and Saline—were not allowed to vote. Why? Because of an organized conspiracy. That is made manifest in this testimony. The judges of election skulked away and hid th-poll-books and hid themselves. And the witnesses swore they went to the clerk of the court to know what to do, and the clerk of the court said: "There is no remedy for you."

It is shown that these very delectable gentlemen had fixed a box two hundred yards off, for the negroes to vote at. The negroes went to the other ballot-box, five hundred and fifty-four men with Bradley tickets in their hands in their own township, and were not allowed to vote. That is not contradicted. That is not disputed. Take these 554 votes and the 1,564, making 2,118 votes, and you will find that in those counties I have been deprived of that number of votes.

I am coming to Jefferson County as rapidly as I can. In that county I have alleged I was robbed of 3,000 votes, and when I made that assertion my mind was exactly in the same condition as the mind of the Queen of the South was in when she returned from hearing the wisdom of Solomon; I had not told more than half of it.

The committee in making up their report by some mysterious blindness failed to see the testimony of Hon. O. P. Snyder, the first witness. There is no allusion made in the report to his testimony, the testimony of a man who was a member of the Forty-second and Forty-third Congresses of the United States. He swears that he had Bradley's tickets printed; that he circulated them in the county, and superintended the canvass for Bradley in the county, and that he knows that 4,000 republican voters were enthusiastic for me, and in his own township at least 200 democrats, which was more than half their whole number. Yet the committee have never called his name in their report. He says he had been a member of both branches of the State Legislature, of two constitutional conventions, had served two terms in Congress, had served for ten years as chairman of the republican county committee in that county, had canvassed every township, had lived there twenty-five years, had given out the Bradley tickets, and that the people everywhere were enthusiastic on that side. The sheriff, one of Slemmons's agents, says there are 4,000 republican voters in that county and between 1,000 and 1,500 democratic votes. Snyder swears that in Vaigine Township I had the votes of 1,000 republicans and 200 democrats, while Slemmons had less than 200; and in that township I got 63 majority.

Here is the way I got it. And right here the committee and I have a little misunderstanding about a rule of law, the only place I think where we differ about a rule of law. I have shown here by the testimony of one of the judges of election that the judges took the two boxes to the office of Mr. Slemmons's lawyer, Mr. M. L. Jones; that both the boxes having fourteen hundred votes in them were locked; that during the night they opened the boxes, and one of the judges each took out a handful of tickets, and each counting for himself, said to the clerk, "Put down so many hundred for Bradley and so many hundred for Slemmons." The committee says this is not admissible because it is hearsay testimony. I suppose that committee had forgotten some of the rules laid down by Mr. Greenleaf and Mr. Starkey, that while hearsay testimony is not admissible, confessions freely made are always admissible; and this testimony is the confession of one of the guilty parties. That is the way to treat that point. It is hearsay testimony; but it is a confession in the presence of A. A. C. Rogers, as shown by his testimony, a member for two terms of this House. My first two witnesses are both ex-Congressmen, and their testimony should be entitled to respect from this House.

Now I come to Jefferson County, and I ask the Clerk to read Exhibit B, attached to the testimony of H. K. White, to show the exact condition that Jefferson County was in when that election took place. And I say to every man in this House, if you want to learn what you never did know before about southern elections just listen to that testimony. It is the correspondence of a northern man to the Globe-Democrat.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE FIRE OF HATE—TWO THREATENING SPEECHES DELIVERED BY SOUTHERN FANATICS—NO WONDER THAT IMMIGRATION GOES EVERYWHERE EXCEPT TO ARKANSAS.

[Special correspondence of the Globe-Democrat.]

PINE BLUFF, ARKANSAS, June 28.

I am a northern man, and I have heard much about the feeling of the southern people toward the colored race, and have believed but little I have heard, attributing the statements to political acerbity and the eagerness to make a successful campaign. But visiting this place a week on a business tour, I found most of the business men attending a democratic convention, and as I had to wait until they were through there before I could have a say with them, I straggled into the court-house and watched the progress of a southern democratic county convention, and for unequalled, outspoken, and appalling force of utterance I think two of the speeches of the occasion excel anything of the kind I have ever heard. In this county, I am told, the colored men have, with the white republicans, a full majority of 2,500 votes. The late county judge resigned, and a democratic judge was appointed by Governor Miller. The county judge appoints the judges and clerks of election. There were present as lookers-on about two or three hundred colored men. Being called out, Major N. T. White spoke substantially as follows:

"When the republican party were in power in this State they would not respect the rights of the democrats, and now we have the power, and I am determined that they shall be paid in their own coin. A decade of oppression of these scoundrels would not serve to punish them sufficiently for their outrages on us when they were surfeited with the power of reconstruction. Now we are in power; we have the machinery of election; we have all the arts and appliances of party success so forcibly taught by Tammany. We have taken lessons, too, from republicans in maintaining official tenure by a minority against the majority. We know how to use them; we don't want to be forced to use them, but by the gods, if it becomes necessary to give the offices to our side, we intend to use them, and use them in every manner necessary to execute our designs. Ballots are our weapons, if ballots will win, and we intend to multiply our ballots as often as the kaleidoscope will multiply a ray of the sun, if found to be necessary; and if still it is found expedient, we will use sterner weapons. We come now not to lead but to drive. We come not to persuade, but to intimidate. We have exhausted persuasion. We have labored day in and day out that we might convince by logic, but you have been deaf to logic. (to the colored men.) We have striven to excite you to friendship by retrospective reference to our boyhood associations. We have pointed out to you the common good to be secured by uniting and voting with us, that intelligence might prevail in all your offices.

"But you have not heard us, or if you have you have not heeded us. You have scoffed our advice. You have reviled our solicitude. You have spat upon our compromises. And now the hour of retribution is at hand. You may outnumber us, but you can't outvote us, for verily it is written, you shall not. We care not for Hayes; we care not for Congress. It is idle to talk to us about old Sherman and his army; we are now masters of the situation, and you had just as well wheel into line. Come freely if you will, or by force, it shall result as though you had come. Determination was never stronger than it is with us. We have come to conquer. This proud Anglo-Saxon blood of ours is not going to stoop to conquer any more; we are born to sway the inferior race, and we now but give you a behest of our nature. Believe us or not—heed not—when the ides of the September elections melt away with the western sun, and the heralds bring tidings of the battle, you will find that we have elected every officer."

Major White retired amid vociferous applause, and then came T. B. Martin, esq., who said: "Truth is mighty and will prevail. The truth of our strength lies in our intelligence. The democrats pay nearly all of the taxes in this county. They have for a long time felt that the manner in which they were taxed to keep up the expenses of the county, and to keep republican officers in office, was unbearable. For a long time the fire of their wrath against the negroes of the county has been kindling, but now it has reached a white blaze, and the incarnadine heat will not cool until every republican officer in the county has given way to a democrat. It is simply written that thus it shall be. Don't mistake the prophecy. It is not false prophecy. It is sure to be fulfilled. It is as certain as the interpretation of Joseph's dream. You have had your seven fat kine, your seven years of official rule, of power and pomp and splendor in our county affairs, and we have had our lean ones. But now our fat years approach. They are nearly upon us, and don't you doubt it. We are terribly in earnest, and we know no such word as fail. We may not have the numbers, but we have the means. You may outvote us, but we can outcount you. In short, though the heavens fall, though the whole of New England shed tears over your defeat, and each radical sheet in the land is a blaze of double-headed, high-headed columns of excitement over what they may see proper to term 'an outrage,' yet we will not falter. We may try to persuade you, but we have very little patience left in this line. Our stock of patience and forbearance with you is sold out. We propose now to lay aside turf and try stones. If you are not up the tree the stones will not hit you. You had better come down, then. You had better come to our side. Your republican leaders may tell you, 'No danger.' But believe them if you want to. If they think they are safe let them keep on in the way of their wickedness. But if they get in our way—in our grand, resolute, determined, onward, upward, glorious march of success—they must look out for their own heads. We want to avoid it. We want you to stay at home and work your cotton-fields and corn-fields; but if you don't, if you still persist in participating in the affairs of State against our will, look out for I tell you the wheels of Juggernaut will run over your prostrate bodies. This is but a word of warning, but remember it, and don't you forget it."

The speaker was frequently cheered, and when he sat down, his eyes flashing the fire of hate, I felt sorry for the poor terrified colored men present. Consternation seemed to have awed them; dismay was written on their countenances. Is it true that people in America entitled to all the rights of citizenship can be so sadly used? Is it possible that in one little county a republican majority of 2,500 can thus be overcome by brute force, by arms, and by outrage? No wonder that immigration goes everywhere else but to Arkansas.

VIATOR.

Mr. BRADLEY. I want to say now that in Vaigine Township the committee has very kindly allowed me 700 votes in that box, which added to the 2,118 with which I came to that county from Chicot and Hempstead would give me 2,818. You see I am very nearly up to the majority of Mr. Slemmons. Then come down to Melton Township, where the ballot-box was thrown away at night, and it full of tickets, and never has been counted yet, and they give me 115 votes, which makes 2,931 votes for me, overcoming Slemmons's majority entirely.

It is shown here by the testimony of the clerk of the county court that in four townships in Jefferson County the boxes were left in the woods and are lost until to-day. On the morning of the election 5,500 voters with tickets in their hands fell into the power of these party machinists, and at night they could account but for 2,700 of them, and there were over 2,700 killed and missing in that county unaccounted for. Now how do you account for that? Here are Mr. Snyder and Mr. Rogers, both of them ex-Congressmen, who swear that republicans 4,000 strong were enthusiastic for me; that is the word Mr. Snyder used. Mr. Snyder says: "I know Bradley must have received 200 democratic votes in that town."

Now we come to Spring Township and Talladega Township, in the hills, two little democratic townships, the only townships unhurt by the hands of fraud. It was shown by the chairman of the democratic county committee that they were both democratic townships; and yet I lacked only 3 votes of doubling Mr. Slemmons's vote in both of them. What do you think of that? Mr. Rogers testifies:

On one occasion, while standing at the ballot-box and giving a Bradley ticket to a colored friend who asked for it, he handed the ticket to one of the judges, but before it fairly passed out of his hands a deputy sheriff put a Slemmons ticket in the hands of the judge, took the Bradley ticket, and the judge put the Slemmons ticket in the box.

Now, the Committee on Elections—and here is where I beg leave to differ with them again—ask me why I did not go into the clerk's office and get these tickets and count them over again. In the name of God Almighty, do you mean to insult the very children of the country by taking ballot-boxes which are shown to be stuffed fraudulently and counting the ballots as mine? What more? Mr. Rogers says that all over the court-house yard democrats took pencils and ran them through Bradley's name on the tickets, under pretense of writing "For license," and then wrote in Slemmons's name. Yet this committee wants me to take these polluted, poisoned tickets out of the box and count them, and predicate my claims on the result of that counting.

I would ask that committee if there was not a piece of documentary evidence filed before the committee, a certified transcript from the Jefferson circuit court of a report of the grand jury, and that grand jury democratic, showing that every single ballot-box, election return, poll-book, and all that had been stolen out of the clerk's office and destroyed? Where is that report? I filed it here myself, certified with the seal of the circuit court of Jefferson County. I filed it in the committee-room and it was read there. Yet I am asked by the committee to count these votes.

There is one other point. Turn to the testimony of Daniel M. Robinson, the third witness for Jefferson County, and you will find something that will enlighten you in regard to the machinery of elections. He says that on the evening after that election was over, four thousand democratic tickets were printed in the Pine Bluff Press office with the name "W. S. Slemmons" on them, and "against license." Now, the committee says that Mr. Portis has accounted for those tickets. I am afraid the committee never looked long at that question.

Mr. Portis and Mr. Haycock testify that the tickets they had printed were "for Slemmons and for license and were printed in the morning." The committee never thought of that. Dan. M. Robinson swears that the editor at four o'clock in the evening gave him a job of tickets to set up. Who is Dan. M. Robinson? He is a democrat, as he testifies, who voted for Slemmons. He printed a number of the tickets, and a young man printed the balance; and at dark, when that election was over, Mr. Portis and Mr. Haycock were there in the office of the Pine Bluff Press folding up these tickets. What were those tickets wanted for? I suppose the committee think they were wanted to amuse the school children in the country! The polls were closed at sundown, and at dark the chairman of the democratic county committee was standing in the office folding up 4,000 Slemmons tickets and taking care of them. What do you think of that? Yet you are trifled with by being asked to retain in a seat here a man who comes here with a majority made up with pen and ink, not with ballot.

One man said, "How do you expect to overcome so large a majority?" Why, sir, the very parties who made up that majority knew that it would not do to make a small majority. If the majority was made five hundred, one township in Hempstead County would overcome it. If it were made two thousand, Jefferson County would overcome it. But it might not do to put the majority too far beyond reason. So like a doctor's bill they bring it down to a fraction, and make it 2,527 majority.

It is a well-known fact that it took one month and six days to find out the result of that election. Within that time we in Arkansas could have heard the result of seventeen presidential elections. It was just one month and six days before the result of this election was announced. That was because it was necessary to wait until the doctors got through with the sick in every county.

Now, if you will examine the testimony as to Jefferson County and throw out the four thousand tickets that were doctored, you are bound to believe that my majority, instead of being 419, was 3,000. Mr. Snyder, Mr. Rogers, and others swear that the regular republican majority there was from 2,400 to 2,500; that the party supported me solidly. Then, in one township out of nearly 400 democratic votes, I got 200. Yes, sir, I received more democratic votes in that county than the contestee himself; and I could do it again to-morrow.

If this House has any doubt as to the result of this election, let it send the question back to the people. I will fold my hands and submit it to the votes of that district provided you will insure me a fair election.

I ask this House, I ask the members of this committee, this question: If Slemmons could have beaten me without these things why in the name of God were these things done? I am not charged with any fraud anywhere. Here are clean hands and a pure heart, so far as that election is concerned. It has not been charged that I am claiming this seat upon a single fraudulent vote. We knew that on a fair election we had that district two to one. I relied upon a fair election. I submit the question to this House, if Slemmons and his friends had not thought that a fair election would beat him, why were these things resorted to? I defy any philosopher to solve the problem.

I must answer one allegation in regard to Chicot County which I had nearly forgotten. The committee say that John E. Bradley, a son of mine, was in that county and contradicted the candidacy of Mr. Williams as declared by those posters. Now let me explain that matter. My son swears that he went down on the train with Dawson, who told him that he was going to Watson to establish a lodge; that when they reached Arkopolis, the end of the railroad, he took a mule and started for Lake village, leaving Mr. Dawson there; that he did not know Mr. Dawson's business, and when he came back on Saturday night he found these posters up. Dawson had taken a boat and gone down the river. The candidacy of Mr. Williams was contradicted by my son in only one little township now in another county, and was then geographically isolated from this county. But suppose he had contradicted it all over the county. Is Mr. Slemmons to come here and claim the advantage of the proclamation made by my son in contradiction of his crime? If such a proclamation was made by my son, would not people naturally say that even if Williams was a candidate, Bradley's son would deny it?

Gentlemen, I may be overcome in this contest by the power of party; I may be crowded down and crushed by party passion; but I will never compromise my moral manhood for a seat in this House; I will never surrender that manhood in order to accumulate the emoluments of a Congressman. I have a seat in the hearts of the people of Arkansas, and that seat Mr. Slemmons cannot contest, thank God. I would rather maintain a seat upon the throne of their affections than occupy a cane-bottom chair here. [Laughter.]

I have not come here merely to get this seat. I have come here to vindicate right and justice, to stand here in behalf of twenty thousand honest men all over that district who said to me "you must contest this election." To-day I throw the onus on you. I ask whether by your act you will strike down law and order for the sake of party. For one vote in this House that you may gain by this act you will lose thousands of votes among the people. Will you strike down 20,000 voters in Arkansas to retain in a seat here one man who is worth nothing to you? You had better have an honest man here; a man who will act upon the convictions of his own conscience on all questions, who never did bow to the feet of any party, who never followed as a wagon-dog behind any party.

Mr. Slemmons's witnesses have undertaken to prove that I was a democrat because I was an elector for Seymour and Blair in 1868, which was the fact. I am proud to say I am a freeman; I expect to live and die free. I would rather transmit to my posterity a record as an American freeman—I would rather rise to the full-orbed splendor of American moral manhood—than occupy a seat in this House until the day of my death.

Give me justice; that is all I ask. Rather than come here and seek a seat by fraud, I would do what the contestee said in the committee-room he would do when he accused his people of wrong; I will fold up my tent and like the Arab creep out of the country. But I will never go out of my country for the crime of others. I leave the question with you.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SLEMONS. Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to detain the House at any length on this contested-election case, and especially in view of the fact that I am vindicated and my claim to my seat indorsed by a nearly unanimous vote of the Committee on Elections. It is neither necessary for me to defend myself nor to defend the committee. Those gentlemen are able to take care of themselves. But I would be wanting in the nobler impulses of manhood and unmindful of the good name of the people whom I have had the honor to represent for so many years were I to pass unnoticed the aspersions cast upon them by the gentleman who has preceded me—that people with whom I have lived from boyhood to the present time, and in whose bosom a generous and noble friend never failed to inspire a friendly welcome. I went to that country a boy and a stranger, destitute alike of fortune and pretension; and whatever I am or expect to be to the friendship and generosity of that people I am solely indebted. I was nominated in 1878 in that district as a candidate for Congress. Soon afterward this contestant announced himself as a candidate, by whose solicitation or in whose interest I know not and care not.

Mr. Speaker, the extract from the letter just read is a cowardly and shameless aspersion upon the people of that district and State. The author of it has never been found out, yet many shrewdly suspect the gentleman himself is the author of that letter signed as a northern man. If his attacks upon my people to-day are true, may it not be true that he is the author of the letter at Pine Bluff last year?

When this case came up before the Committee on Elections it was found that through the criminal or shameful ignorance either of the contestant or his attorney they had failed to comply with the law in almost every particular. Growing out of my inclination that he and his people should have a fair hearing before that committee I waived every technical advantage I might have taken, but notwithstanding I allowed all that testimony to come in, I see from the report of the committee they have declared with almost entire unanimity I was fairly elected. The distinguished gentleman from Iowa is the only one who has reported otherwise, and he declares there was no election at all.

But I am not here, as I have already said, to defend myself. That report is sufficient. Nor am I here to defend that committee. Those gentlemen are able to take care of themselves. I am here, however, to say no man in the House or out of it would dare tell me that my friends on that occasion were guilty of fraud. The gentleman tells you I come into this House all covered with fraud. He will never tell me so outside of this House. [Cries of "Oh!" on the republican side.] He will never tell a friend of mine any such thing out of this House. He will never tell my people so. He brings up the distinguished gentleman, Mr. Snyder.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. What would you do?

Mr. SLEMONS. I do not know; he never did it.

Mr. WEAVER. What would you do if he did?

Mr. SLEMONS. I do not mean to intimidate anybody.

Mr. WEAVER. Do you mean it in the spirit of a friend?

Mr. SLEMONS. I am not a bully; and you cannot force me into any such position.

Now, sir, he asserts that on the day of the election at Pine Bluff four thousand tickets were printed after the election. The committee has heard that and passed on it. The committee heard the testimony.

The committee heard the testimony in relation to Chicot County. The committee have passed on my acts in reference to Chicot County. I deny any act of mine, in the sending of those circulars, embarrassed or confused the people of Chicot County. I denied it before the people, and deny it now, that I had anything to do with those circulars. I presume the people took my word for it.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Was it not in your interest?

Mr. SLEMONS. It was not.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Have you any idea who got the money?

Mr. SLEMONS. The man swears, himself. Why not put Mr. Dawson on the stand? He is the man charged with carrying those posters. He was present all the time when the testimony was taken. He naturally would know more about it than anybody else. Why not put him on the stand as to whether I knew anything about it or not? That was legitimate and competent testimony. I was not there and had nothing to do with the testimony. I was here. If I had been there the testimony would have been more conclusive.

Every respectable republican, with two exceptions, in that county did support me, every one of them. I know but two men claiming respectability in that county who did not vote for me.

A MEMBER. Are there any respectable republicans there?

Mr. SLEMONS. A great many good men. I think the majority of the republicans of that county are respectable and that majority voted for me.

Now, sir, so far as the testimony in this Jefferson County is concerned, the committee have passed upon the whole matter. The gentleman charges three ballot-boxes were thrown out. That is not true. One ballot-box was thrown away—captured, I suppose, by some Ku Klux. Another was thrown down by the judges, and left until the next morning. He had the law and all the force necessary to have had that box opened and counted. In one township no election was held at all. In the city of Pine Bluff, on the day of the election, the gentleman was there. He knew whether it was a fair election or not. Why did not he see that the vote was counted? Why not bring up the judges to see whether votes were taken out at intervals?

You see the shameless assertions. Yet all of this testimony was in reach of the gentleman and his friends. The judge of elections was there; the lawyer who conducted the case for him was there; and not one of them was put on the witness-stand. No one was brought forward to testify to one word of what has been alleged in his statement.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. SLEMONS. Certainly.

Mr. BURROWS. Did I understand the gentleman to state that the ballot-box in one of these precincts was taken away by a masked mob?

Mr. SLEMONS. The testimony says that it was. The law requires the ballot-box with the ballots in the boxes to be carried to the courthouse. On the way in this instance the parties alleged that they were met by a masked mob who took the ballot-boxes away from them.

Mr. BURROWS. Was that a republican or democratic mob?

Mr. SLEMONS. I think they were republicans. There is no evidence to show that they were not.

Mr. BURROWS. I presumed of course that they were republicans. [Laughter.]

Mr. SLEMONS. In view of the fact that the gentleman in his statement claims that all of these were republicans, and that this was a strong republican precinct, I naturally conclude that they must have been republicans. [Laughter.] The gentleman claims, too, that he had a large majority of blacks and whites. If that be true, why did he not have a fair election? If he had the numerical strength, as he claims he had, that was all that was necessary to enable him to have a fair election, and yet, in view of that statement, he alleges that there was not a fair election. I was not there. He himself was on the spot and was the only disturber of the peace on that day. As the testimony shows, he insulted men around the polls, and one of them became impatient and struck him. That is the only disturbance I heard of. All of the republicans state that it is a fair election, and the matter about which he alludes on this point, and in reference to which this northern man writes a letter, occurred two months before the congressional election, and had nothing whatever to do with it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, having said this much, I submit that the distinguished gentlemen who have made this report here are able to take care of it and vindicate themselves from all charges which may be made against their report. For myself I feel that I am amply vindicated by the committee, and that I have been vindicated by my country. One of the witnesses mentioned here, Snyder, was once a member of Congress; so perhaps was Mr. Richards, but had no control of the republican organization in the county of Jefferson at the last election.

The Committee on Elections had all the evidence before them, and I desire to thank them for the confidence and fairness with which they have treated me and my people in regard to that election. Whatever this House may determine I am ready to abide by. The committee in its wisdom saw fit to lecture me on the subject of etiquette in my answer, and I submit to it gracefully—as gracefully as I can. I am willing and prepared to abide by the decision of this House. I bow to that decision without a murmur, whatever it may be, satisfied in the conviction that the judgment of the people of this country has long since been fully and fairly expressed on the subject.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4568) for the protection of the Potomac fisheries, with an amendment thereto, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—BRADLEY VS. SLEMONS.

Mr. SAWYER. I yield now to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WEAVER.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COX in the chair.) For how long a time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEAVER. I suppose I would have the privilege of occupying the floor in my own right; but it is proper I should state that I announced to the House if the contestant in this case was allowed to address the House in his own behalf there would be no more time taken on his side; and now I do not wish to violate that agreement if there should be the slightest objection on the part of the House. [Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"] I shall not occupy much time, and would not occupy any but for the reason that the contestant by reason of extreme hoarseness was unable to present his side of the case as he desired.

I wish to address myself first to the evidence relating to the conduct of the election in Jefferson County, and I wish the House to understand that there were four townships in that county, all of them strong republican or greenback townships, (at least the united vote was strong against the democratic party,) in which there was no election held for certain reasons which I will state, or in which the ballot-boxes were destroyed after the election. At Melton Township, a strong republican precinct in that county, the ballot-box was thrown away and has never been counted or examined by or for anybody. This township, it is understood, gave a strong majority for the contestant. Why was it necessary to resort to means of that kind in this district?

It must have been apparent to the friends of the contestee that some action of this kind was necessary, for it will be conceded that men do not ordinarily resort to acts of such grave importance as this without some pressing reason for it. The ballot-box in that township was thrown away. In Washington Township in that county, after the election, when the judges were on the way to make the returns to the proper authorities they were met by an armed and masked mob and the ballot-box and its contents taken away by force and have never been seen or heard of from that day to this.

Now, I ask, why was that done? If the gentleman, the contestee, had received a large part of the "respectable" republican votes of that township, why was it necessary to waylay the judges of election and take by force the ballot-box? Plainly for the reason that the republican votes of that township were not "respectable," as contestee styles them, and hence not entitled to be counted.

In Dunnington Township there was no return. Although there was an election held, there was no return made. That was another strong republican township. An election was held, but the judges of election in that township and in these other townships were every one of them supporters of Mr. Slemmons.

In Barroque Township, another strong Bradley precinct, there was an election held, but no return made. The officers of that township were also friends of the contestee. I submit that in a county where it is testified that upon a fair vote there would be 2,500 republican and greenback majority as against this contestee, testimony of such a grave character as this is sufficient to convince all fair men that no untrammelled election was held in that county. What security is there for the purity of this House, for the purity of the ballot-box in that State or anywhere else, if transactions of this kind are to be sanctioned and winked at by this august assembly?

The majority of the committee find it necessary to severely criticize this conduct; but their report does not go far enough. I submit we owe it to the dignity of this House, to the purity of elections, and to the general sense of justice of the entire American people that when a transaction of this kind occurs, without regard to party—I do not charge it on the democratic party here; I could not be led to believe they would sanction a thing of this kind—but we owe it without distinction of party to send the parties back to the sovereign people, and have them vote a second time and say who they desire to represent them.

Now, one word with regard to the connection of the contestee with these frauds. I was very sorry to hear him use the language he did. It was in the nature of a threat. What I say on the floor of this House I would say anywhere. I refer to his connection with the Chicot County affair, and I ask the House now to listen to the exact language of the notice of contest in this case and the reply made to it by the contestee. I quote from the notice, page 2:

2. And for the further reason that you sent one Richard A. Dawson from Pine Bluff to Chicot County, one of the counties of said second congressional district, on Wednesday before the election aforesaid, with printed posters to put up in said county, and with tickets announcing one John A. Williams as the republican nominee for Congress from the said second congressional district, asking all good republicans to support him, by which 1,500 voters in said county were confused and did not vote in said election, who otherwise would have voted for me; all of which will be proven.

The charge is direct that he sent Richard A. Dawson to Chicot County on the errand stated. What is the answer he makes to that? He passes over the entire charge that he sent Dawson there with the posters without a denial, and comes to the allegation as to the effect the posters had upon the voters. He uses the following language in reply to this explicit charge:

The charge that in Chicot County the voters were confused by a proclamation sent by me, that 1,500 who would have voted for you did not vote at all, is untrue.

What is untrue? The charge that these voters were confused by the proclamation sent by the contestee, and that 1,500 who would have voted for the contestant did not vote at all. He denies the result merely, but not that he sent Dawson there. He is charged with having sent Richard A. Dawson with the posters. He at no time denied that till he denied it here on the floor of the House to-day.

Now, what is the testimony outside his admission tending to connect the contestee himself with that affair? The testimony shows the bills were printed at the democratic printing office, the Pine Bluff Press. There is another printing office there, that of the Jefferson Republican. These bills were printed at the democratic office and there was put at the bottom of them "Republican print"—a fraud and a lie upon its face. That was intended to deceive the voters of Chicot County. It had that effect. They accomplished in that way all they intended to accomplish. That is fraud No. 1.

H. King White, a friend and ardent supporter of the contestee, got those posters printed. Who took them from that printing office? One Sam. Ryan, another friend of the contestee. He took them to the Pine Bluff hotel. The contestee does not live in that town. He lives some sixty miles away. They were taken to the hotel where the contestee was stopping; taken to a room. The witness says he does not remember what room it was nor what room the contestee was occupying. The next thing we hear of those posters they were posted up in Chicot County. But prior to that, on the morning after they were printed, Dawson was seen standing at the depot talking with W. F. Slemmons, the contestee.

That was early in the morning. It is not shown that Slemmons had any other business in the city that night, or any other business at the depot that morning, except to give instructions to the men who were having these fraudulent posters prepared for Chicot County. Now, I submit that when you prove that these were printed at the request of an ardent supporter of the contestee, that the contestee was there when they were printed, that he was in the printing office about the time they were printed, that they were taken to the hotel where he was stopping, and that he was talking privately at the depot with the man who posted them up in Chicot County at the very moment he was starting on his disgraceful mission, that the announcement contained in the posters caused confusion in the minds of the voters, it is too late for men in this House to express any doubt that Slemmons himself was a party to the transaction.

In the notice of contest the contestant charges this fraud directly upon the contestee. How does he reply? He simply denies that confusion resulted from it. Take that testimony, piled tome upon tome, and you cannot resist the conclusion that contestee himself procured it to be done. If I had a man before a jury charged with larceny or any other crime, and had that kind of circumstantial testimony and that kind of admission from the prisoner himself, I would send him to the penitentiary; and I doubt not that in the State of Arkansas he could be hung upon such testimony, if the offense were capital.

The democratic party is called upon to purge itself of this charge that it is favoring bulldozing and all kinds of intimidation in districts where they cannot carry elections by fair votes. Here is an excellent opportunity to do it. I say to the democratic party of this country that they cannot afford to carry a charge of that kind supported by such testimony as has been adduced in this case. The way to purge that party of the impression that obtains in States that are not democratic that they are in favor of bulldozing and fraudulent practices at the polls, is to place their sovereign feet on such transactions and to say to the people: "Whenever a case comes before us tinctured by fraud, intimidation, and corruption, as in this case, you shall by our votes have the right to try the case over again and say whom you desire to represent you."

Now, what was the effect of this in Chicot County? The testimony clearly shows that the announcement of this man Williams as a candidate for Congress did have the effect of so confusing the voters of that county that they did not know what the truth was, and staid away from the polls.

Mr. MANNING. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. WEAVER. Certainly.

Mr. MANNING. Do I now understand the gentleman to be undertaking to make the impression upon this House that that "trick" of which he is speaking was not denounced promptly in Chicot County as a fraud? Does he not know that two of contestant's witnesses stated that it was denounced as a trick, and that it was actually used to benefit the contestant and to prejudice the contestee? I put it to him to answer.

Mr. WEAVER. I will answer you—

Mr. MANNING. I put it to him to answer whether the testimony in this case does not show that the contestant and not the contestee was the beneficiary of this trick in some degree, if not to entirely overcome the injury sustained?

Mr. WEAVER. I undertake to say that the testimony does not show any such thing.

Mr. MANNING. I undertook to say—

Mr. WEAVER. I cannot yield for an argument.

Mr. MANNING. I differ with you on a question of fact, and I want to state it.

Mr. WEAVER. Very well.

Mr. MANNING. I say that this report is signed by all the members of the Committee on Elections with a single exception, by all so far as the democrats are concerned, and also signed by W. H. CALKINS, E. OVERTON, jr., W. A. FIELD, J. WARREN KEIFER, JOHN H. CAMP, with this statement:

We concur in the conclusions of law above set forth, and also in the conclusion as to the right of the sitting member to hold his seat.

The report signed by these gentlemen states the fact that there were two witnesses who testified in behalf of contestant to the effect that the trick in Chicot County which the gentleman denounces was turned to the advantage of the contestant.

Mr. WEAVER. Now let me say this in reply: In the first place I am not responsible for the action of the republican members of that committee. As the old woman said when the parrot flew into the church and began to damn the whole congregation, "You must not damn me; I do not belong to this denomination." But I will say this: that there is not one word in their concurring opinion which says that they concur in any statement of fact on the part of the majority of the committee.

The testimony shows that in one township H. W. Graves denied that John A. Williams was a candidate, and pronounced the posters as fraudulent. In that township there was a fair vote and John M. Bradley received all the republican votes of the township. But the posters were scattered throughout the county, and the denial did not reach the entire voting population. Even in that township there were 100 voters who did not attend the election in consequence of those posters. They were confused. They were ignorant colored men. They loved John A. Williams; he was their best friend when they needed a friend; and they thought that if Williams was a candidate they ought not to vote against him. It was suggested to some of them that he was not a candidate. "Well," they said, "we do not know what is the truth about it and we will stay away from the polls." They did stay away; and the effect was the return of William F. Slemmons to the Forty-sixth Congress. I say that this House ought not to sanction anything of that kind.

But it is asked how could this result to the benefit of the contestant? I will explain that. [To Mr. Bradley.] How many votes did you receive in the county of Chicot?

Mr. BRADLEY. Two hundred and thirty-six.

Mr. WEAVER. Two hundred and thirty-six votes, while the testimony is that upon a fair vote in that county there were 1,800 republican and greenback votes. Now it is a little remarkable that the contestant should get but 236 of those 1,800 votes. Mr. Williams received some 90 votes, when he was not a candidate at all, as the result of the fraudulent announcement of his candidacy. I say that upon every principle of equity the election in that county and in Jefferson County and in Hempstead County should be declared null and void. In a case like this where there is extreme doubt as to whether there was a fair election you should send the question back to the people. Let them try again and hold an honest election there.

I call upon my democratic friends representing southern districts to join me in vindicating your party and the sacred character of the ballot. I am not asking anything unreasonable. I do not ask that Mr. Bradley shall be declared elected. From the testimony I do not know whether he was elected or not. I do know, however, that if a fair election had been held in that district a very different result would have been reached from that which was declared. I do not know whether Mr. Slemmons was honestly elected or not; nor do you. No man living can stand here and say that he was certainly and honestly elected. The claim is that Mr. Bradley was swindled out of 1,500 votes and more in Chicot County—votes which he ought to have received if a fair election had been held; that he was deprived of more than 2,000 votes in Jefferson County which he ought to have received and in fact did receive, but which through fraud were not counted for him; that he was cheated out of 700 votes in Hempstead County; that he was cheated out of other votes which were cast for him but never counted.

I must say plainly that in view of the facts of this case, in view of the overwhelming testimony of wrong, intimidation, and bulldozing in that district, I am astonished that my republican colleagues on the committee ever signed the majority report. I say that an explanation is due from them to this House and to the country.

I did not expect to speak at all on this case and would not have done so had not the contestant himself grown so boarse that he could not speak. I stand here representing neither the democratic party nor the republican party. I stand here representing a new party—the national greenback party, one of whose cardinal principles is that we shall have free and fair elections North and South; that we shall have neither bulldozing at the polls by the shot-gun nor bulldozing in the North by the intimidation of the poor and the lowly in workshops, factories, and mines. We stand here to-day claiming that without regard to wealth, without regard to "respectability" even, it is the right of every American citizen who has not been disfranchised for crime to cast his vote untrammelled, without fear, favor, or intimidation, and that when his ballot has been once honestly cast the whole power of the Government should be pledged to see it fairly counted. [Applause.] This is the position of the party to which I belong.

One of the greatest dangers that to-day threatens the Republic is the hatred existing not between individual members of different parties but between party organizations divided by sectional lines. I ask gentlemen of this House to join me in rising to the high plane of guaranteeing equal and exact justice and a free ballot to all men, no matter with what party they may affiliate. Do this and you will have done all that is necessary to convince the patriotic people in this country that you intend a fair, free, impartial election wherever the flag waves. You ought to do this. The rights of William F. Slemmons or of John M. Bradley are comparatively insignificant when weighed alongside the right of the American people to have free, untrammelled, and honest elections. The Republic is gone whenever the purity of the ballot-box is overthrown. If this nation of ours, if its Constitution, rests on anything whatever, it is upon a free and untrammelled ballot, a fair election, and a fair count. And we give you notice now on all sides of this House to-day, as we enter into the contest of 1880, let the people choose whether this shall remain a republic, or become an empire or an aristocracy, we intend to have a fair election. We will have it by any means that God and nature have placed in our hands, and the way to have it is for all parties to put themselves on their good behavior, and commence now, this day, by saying the election in the second congressional district of Arkansas shall be declared null and void, and the people of that district, as a test case, as an earnest of what we intend to do in the future—that the people of that district shall have the right this fall to say who shall represent them in the Forty-sixth Congress.

I did not expect to make a speech. I make this appeal not as a partisan; I make it, if I know what it is to rise to the altitude of a patriot, I make it in the feeling and in the spirit, not of a partisan, but as a well-wisher of my country. If in talking it has become necessary to use the name of any party harshly, remember I do not charge it upon the party as such. But if it should become the act of the party through their indorsement in this House, then it will become a very different question. I now yield the floor.

Mr. MANNING. One single moment on the issue of fact between the gentleman and myself.

Mr. CALKINS. I will yield to the gentleman for a moment.

Mr. MANNING. I was not one of the sub-committee charged with the investigation of this case, and I do not deem it important I should enter into the discussion of its merits. As remarked by the contestee, the committee making the report, the sub-committee of the general committee, is abundantly able to take care of itself both as to legal questions and the facts which have been developed.

But during the progress of the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa, with the report in my hand, I was surprised to hear him state, so broadly as it was his pleasure to do, that this "trick," which was perpetrated by a friend of the contestee in the county of Chicot, had the effect of confusing the voters in that county, and that its effect solely was to damage the contestant, and that the contestee was the beneficiary. I read an extract from that report, in which it is stated that it was denounced as a fraud, and two of the contestant's witnesses stated it was so used as to advance the interest of the contestant. I made the issue with the gentleman. I hold now, obtained in the brief moments since the issue was joined between the gentleman and myself, the testimony, the name of the witness, and the full details of that matter, so far as the witness deposing could give them. The gentleman was quite bold, he was prompt, and he wore a triumphant air when he accepted the challenge I submitted to him, and he reasserted that there was no testimony in this case showing this matter had been turned to the advantage of the contestant. See how a plain statement of the case will set him down. I read on page 43 of the printed testimony from the deposition of H. W. Graves:

Interrogatory 22. State, if you know, whether or not there were any votes cast for John A. Williams at the precinct where you were on the 5th day of November, 1878; and, if so, how many?

It will be remembered by the House, John A. Williams was the man who was presented to the people of Chicot County as the candidate of the republican party for Congress. His name was used without authority, and it was charged that it was a fraud, an imposition upon the voters of that county. This witness, Graves, answered that interrogatory:

Answer. I think there were none cast. I asserted that I believed that the posters announcing John A. Williams as a candidate were a fraud and a put-up job to defeat John M. Bradley, being satisfied that if John A. Williams was a candidate I would have heard from him and members of our county central committee of any change of programme, if any; there were more votes cast for John M. Bradley at that precinct than any other precinct in the county.

Mr. SAWYER. Let me call the gentleman's attention to interrogatory 19 and the answer on page 45.

Mr. MANNING. I am coming to that. I have had the time only to take a hop, skip, and jump over the testimony, but I have had time sufficient to enable me, I think, to set the gentleman down upon the issue which he joined with me.

Mr. WEAVER. Let me ask are you through, as I have not yet concluded.

Mr. MANNING. I beg a thousand pardons. I thought you had concluded your remarks.

Mr. CALKINS. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. WEAVER. I desire to answer the gentleman's questions.

Mr. MANNING. Then wait a moment, and I will conclude what I have to say.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MANNING. If the Speaker please, I want but a single moment to set myself right in this connection.

Mr. WEAVER. And I suppose that I will have the right to answer. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. CALKINS. At the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi, to whom I will yield for a moment, I will resume the floor and then yield to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WEAVER.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi will proceed.

Mr. WEAVER. That is all right.

Mr. MANNING. I desire now to read interrogatory 23 on page 43:

Interrogatory 23. State whether or not the votes cast for John M. Bradley on that day were cast by republican voters, and was the usual number of republican votes cast.

Answer. I think that all the votes he received at that precinct were from republicans. The usual number of republican votes was not cast.

Now, on page 45, if the gentleman from Iowa desires to follow me in this reference to the testimony, I will read interrogatory 19:

Int. 19. Was the mere assertion on your part that the circulation of tickets with the name of John A. Williams upon them was in your opinion a put-up job to defeat Bradley, sufficient to do away with all the influence of the posters and tickets in favor of Williams?

A. After giving my ideas and the views of other prominent republicans, the republicans there generally agreed that the printed poster was a trick, and there was a general understanding that the republicans there would vote for Bradley.

Now, if you please, interrogatory 31, on the same page.

Int. 31. Did your explanation have an influence in favor of Colonel Slemmons or in favor of Colonel Bradley?

My friend from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] understands the witness to say—and asks us to adopt that construction—that had the effect of giving votes for Mr. Slemmons and not for Mr. Bradley; but the witness declares:

A. I don't think my explanation helped Slemmons, but saved some votes for Bradley. My intention was to help Bradley.

Now, that is as far as I have had the time to give to this evidence since I interrupted the gentleman to propound my question. I leave it for this House to determine whether I have authority for insisting he was overstating the case when he said it was not promptly denounced as a fraud.

Mr. WEAVER. By whom?

Mr. MANNING. By the man from whose testimony I have been reading. It was also so stated by Bradley's son, and if you will look at the index you will see the page where his testimony is to be found. I submit to this House whether it is not going very far for the gentleman to insist that the trick swept all the republicans away from Mr. Bradley and into the hands of Mr. Slemmons in Chicot County.

Mr. CALKINS. I yield now to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, there are over nine thousand square miles in Chicot County. There is not a railroad through any portion of it. The announcement it is claimed of the candidacy of Mr. Williams by these posters had the effect of confusing the voters. That is the charge which I made and the testimony shows it. Let me read:

Interrogatory 15. State, if you know, what was the effect of those posters upon the republicans of this county, especially in that portion of the county where you were at that time.

Answer. The printed posters led to confusion, and were the means of keeping a great many republican voters away from the polls.

That is what the testimony shows in regard to confusion.

Mr. MANNING. What page?

Mr. WEAVER. Page 43. You took good care not to read that.

Mr. MANNING. Was there not proof to show what I said? I never intimated, and the gentleman could not have understood me to say so.

Mr. WEAVER. I refer to the reporter's notes whether the testimony did not establish that fact, and I answered it did not.

Mr. MANNING. I challenge the gentleman to pause in his remarks and let the reporter's notes be read, and it will be found I put the question whether there were not two witnesses who stated that.

Mr. WEAVER. There were two witnesses, but the gentleman seems to think the House relied on his witnesses and did not take the witnesses of the contestant into account.

But the testimony here shows that confusion followed the pretended candidature of John A. Williams. The gentleman does not deny that.

Now, there is the explanatory testimony of Mr. Graves that in the township where he (Graves) denounced the frauds the effect of the posters was entirely neutralized.

Mr. MANNING. Let me ask the gentleman to be fair enough to state that those witnesses to whom I have adverted were the witnesses on whom he relied.

Mr. WEAVER. But the witnesses the gentleman adverted to referred to the township where the posters were contradicted and not to the county in general. You [addressing Mr. MANNING] sought to set me down. That sets you down completely.

Mr. MANNING. No such thing. I am glad the gentleman is beginning to accept what I stated. If he will but improve a little further I would have no issue with him.

Mr. WEAVER. If the gentleman would take a proper view of it he would find I had been straight from the beginning.

Mr. MANNING. You have modified your statements on reflection.

Mr. WEAVER. What I have stated is a complete answer to the position of the gentleman from Mississippi that it is shown by the testimony that the circulars turned to the advantage of Mr. Bradley.

I say on the face of it that is absurd. In a county where there are 1,800 republican voters, and only 300 votes went for Bradley, to say that this fraudulent announcement printed at the democratic printing office, with a false imprint, sent out at the dead hour of night, sent clandestinely into the county by the contestee—that that resulted to the benefit of the contestant, surely nobody will believe that. I think it will be impossible for this House on a solemn vote to say that there is not sufficient doubt clinging about that election to warrant this House in unseating the contestee and in declaring the election void.

Mr. CALKINS. Inasmuch as my friend from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] has called upon republican members of the committee to make some explanation as to how they came to sign this majority report, and being the only republican member of the sub-committee before whom this case was heard, I respond at once and think I shall be able to convince even him that the conclusion I came to from the law and the facts is well grounded, and that he is mistaken.

Mr. Speaker, in election cases where the title to the office is being tried as well as the interests of the people whom the particular person at that time represents, and the case is undergoing judicial investigation, it is no time for partisanship, it is no time to indulge in the thought or the expression as to who is the republican, who is the democrat, or who is the greenbacker. These considerations I have attempted, ever since I began serving upon the Committee on Elections, to put under my feet; and it makes no difference to me what the politics of any litigant or of any person appearing before that committee may be. Whatever the law is as applicable to the facts in each case I shall try as an humble member of that committee to apply them and arrive at a just determination. And I have no doubt the same motive actuates all the members of the committee.

Leaving these general considerations and addressing myself for a very few minutes to the facts in this case, I beg leave to remind my friend that the charges in the notice of the contestant to the contestee are unmistakably plain. The first one that I recollect of is—I do not state them in their order but as they come to my recollection—that in the county of Jefferson so many Bradley votes were put into the ballot-box, and that he was defrauded on the count of his rightful vote as cast. That substantially is the charge. Now, what is the proof addressed to that charge? The proof is that some time in the afternoon on the day of election three or four thousand tickets with the contestee's name printed upon them were stricken off at the printing office of one of contestee's friends—the testimony as to the time ranges from one o'clock to dark of that day, there being a conflict of testimony on that point. Upon the proof of that fact, Mr. Speaker, we are asked to find that these tickets fraudulently went into the ballot-boxes before or after the election closed. Although the contents of the ballot-boxes were then accessible to the contestant, not a single one of them was examined. They were all within his reach. Now, can I find as a judge or juror that because on the afternoon of the day of election these tickets were printed they fraudulently went into the ballot-box and the contestant was thereby defeated? This is an illustration of one of the points in this case and a fair sample of the disconnected way in which the case was presented to the committee and is now presented to the House.

Next, there is another charge that in Hempstead County, by murder, fraud, intimidation, and the destruction of ballot-boxes, the contestant was defrauded of a certain number of votes. What is the proof? It is in evidence how many votes were polled at each of these townships. Now count for the contestant all the votes shown in the proof to have been cast for him, and yet he lacks many hundreds of having been elected. Aside from the destruction of one or two ballot-boxes and the unauthorized arrest of one deputy United States marshal, nothing else is shown to have occurred in this county. I submit the contestant cannot complain when we have given him all he claims at these polls.

Then as to Chicot County. The committee, in their report, have already stated to the House that the circulation of the posters in that county was dishonorable—I believe that is the word used in the report—in which I heartily concur. But there must be some tangible evidence as to how those posters affected voters before you can act upon it. The evidence submitted in this county is simply the conclusions of certain witnesses.

Take Jefferson County as an illustration. It is true that the contestant put two or three men on the stand; Snyder was one of them, if I recollect rightly, and he says that the republicans of that county had united with the greenbackers and were "enthusiastic" for Bradley. He says that he or a Mr. Rogers, I forget which, was chairman of the republican committee, and that they were all enthusiastic for Bradley.

Another fact which was proven is that the republican vote of that county was about 4,500. Now, on the proof of those two facts we are asked to find that 4,500 republican voters actually voted, and voted for Bradley, and a large number of these votes were in some way counted out or fraudulently disposed of. Now, I cannot find that to be true, because there is no sufficient proof of it.

Mr. WEAVER. There was proof as to four townships.

Mr. CALKINS. Well, give the contestant all the votes proved to have been polled for him in the four townships, together with all other votes claimed and proven elsewhere and yet he lacks nearly 1,000 of being elected; something like 800, I believe.

One other word. I have no sympathy at all with any evil practices, intimidation, fraud, murder, or anything of that kind practiced on voters, either in Arkansas or anywhere else. Wherever those practices are shown to exist or whenever they occur I will denounce them, no matter in whose interest they may have been used. I have no sympathy at all with that sort of practice. But when you present a case to me to be tried, I must try it first upon the allegations of the declaration and answer and upon the proofs offered. You cannot take common history and general report all over the country of these evil practices and mix them up with the facts, and then undertake to try a case on that basis! Therefore I say that no lawyer can scan the case presented here and come to any other conclusion than that arrived at by the committee.

Now, my friend from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] takes the other view. I do not doubt his honesty in the matter at all. He takes the view that if there is intimidation in a few places, say in three or four townships in a congressional district, which like this is composed of twenty counties, all the honest voters of the whole district must be deprived of representation on this floor until the case can be sent back to them and a new election held.

Mr. WEAVER. No, I do not.

Mr. CALKINS. That is the effect of the gentleman's position. There is no proof here at all in regard to seventeen counties. There are but three counties in regard to which there is proof, Jefferson, Hempstead, and Chicot. The statement in regard to Jefferson County rests upon the proof I have stated, the general ideas of witnesses as to what they believe. Now, if we are to try cases upon evidence of that kind, we had better supersede Greenleaf and Starkie, and adopt the rule of Lieutenant Derby, in his work entitled Phoenixiana. His party started out on a surveying expedition, and he supposed that they were "chaining" the distance they traveled. He was surprised to find at night that the chain had been dragged along. He then went to look at the "go-it-ometer" to find out how far the man had traveled upon whom it was fastened, but the man had stopped at a drinking place and engaged in a dance and the "go-it-ometer" registered something like twenty or thirty miles. Regarding this information as wholly unreliable and not worthy to be noted in the scientific report to be made, he hit upon the novel plan of ascertaining accurate measurements by asking a passing omnibus driver how far it was back to the hotel from where the expedition had started that morning. Upon being informed it was properly noted, and deemed entirely satisfactory.

We had better supersede all rules of evidence and establish some such method as this, if we are to take what somebody believes, or what is generally believed, or generally understood, or generally supposed, and act upon that in determining judicial questions.

Mr. FRYE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CALKINS. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Indiana whether or not the evidence in this case satisfies him that there was a free and fair election in this district and a fair count of the votes cast?

Mr. CALKINS. In the first place, there is no evidence at all as to seventeen counties. The district is composed of twenty counties, and as to seventeen of them there is no controversy. In but three counties was there any testimony taken, and in regard to those three counties, except possibly in Chicot, I have no doubt that the election was as fair and free, speaking now outside of the record, as we generally understand elections are in the South. [Great laughter on the republican side.] Speaking from the testimony in the case, I wish to assure the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] that, if there was in those three counties any general system of bulldozing or intimidation, it is not shown in the testimony. In four townships some suspicion of that kind is very strongly raised; but in the others it is not.

Mr. FRYE. Is it traced at all to the sitting member, who wrote that answer to the contestant?

Mr. CALKINS. There is an entire absence of testimony on that point. There is no evidence connecting the contestee with intimidations or what is usually designated "bulldozing."

Mr. FRYE. Was the circular which was sent out traced to him?

Mr. CALKINS. It is claimed on the one hand that it was, and is denied on the other.

Mr. FRYE. What is your opinion?

Mr. CALKINS. If you want to know what I think about it—

Mr. FRYE. I do.

Mr. CALKINS. I will say that if I were acting in the capacity of a judge in the trial of a civil cause, and this evidence was before me just as it now stands, I should be inclined to find that the preponderance of the evidence on that subject is against the contestee; but in a criminal cause I should be perfectly willing to give him the benefit of the doubt and acquit him. [Laughter.]

Mr. FRYE. The gentleman has satisfied me that I ought to vote for the resolution of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. CALKINS. I am quite sorry for that, because the gentleman ought always to vote right.

I yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. KEIFER.]

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I shall occupy but a few moments in the consideration of this case. It was not my purpose to say a word upon it. With a great deal of reluctance I came to the conclusion that the sitting member, Mr. Slemons, upon the testimony found in the record, was entitled to hold his seat in this House. I came to that conclusion following the precedents which make the law for the government of this body.

There are many things in and about this case not in the record, and there are some things thrown into the record which excite a very considerable amount of suspicion that the contestee was not entirely free from very bad conduct in the course of the election in his district in 1878. But, Mr. Speaker, one thing is true—and upon that my distinguished friend from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] will agree with me—that the testimony here which attacks a portion of the majority of the contestee obtained in that election is insufficient to overthrow his entire majority.

In all kindness to the gentleman from Iowa, without desiring to detract at all from the glory he may take in attempting to assume here to be the champion of free elections, let me say that in his report he did not find that any such thing had happened as would suffice to overthrow the entire majority returned for the sitting member. The gentleman's very short report is not quite up to his boldness on the floor of the House, for it simply suggests that there may be something in this case tending to show that Mr. Slemons was not elected. In the discharge of our duty here toward a fellow-member, are we called upon on such a finding as that to oust the sitting member? I wish to observe here that I do not deny the right of the House to reject the entire vote of a voting precinct where it is shown that intimidation, fraud, or bribery so far entered into the election as to render it impossible to eliminate it from the honest vote cast. But in such case the unlawful means used in a particular voting place would not vitiate the election held in other voting places in the district.

Mr. Speaker, there is one question which may arise, and doubtless has arisen, in the minds of many gentlemen around me. Suppose it appears by the proof that the sitting member's majority as returned is 2,827; suppose it appears that of this majority 2,000 votes were obtained through intimidation, fraud, or other improper means; suppose it appears that these 2,000 votes ought to be struck off of the contestee's majority, because the proof shows that he was guilty of fraud and violence; suppose his majority is thus reduced to about 800. Now, are we upon that sort of finding called upon to say that this gentleman was not elected. Let it be understood that we give to the contestant the benefit of every claim, every shadow of claim, that he submits; yet in the case I put it leaves the contestee with a majority of 800 unattacked. Upon such a case are you prepared to find that the contestee, as a matter of law, was not elected? That would be equivalent to saying that because he claims 2,500 majority and was entitled to claim only 800, therefore he is not elected at all. This is a proposition which the gentleman from Iowa does not meet and cannot meet. In his report he does not undertake to say that the majority of the contestee was overcome. He does suggest that if the House would find certain things which he does not undertake to say were proved by the evidence, then he is in favor of the resolution which he submits. The gentleman was a member of the sub-committee that examined this case, and if he had been able to point the committee or the House to any evidence showing that the majority of the contestee was overcome by reason of improper conduct on his part or on the part of his political friends, I would have been willing to respond to his appeal to vindicate the purity of the ballot-box. I would not draw fine legal distinctions to save the contestee or any person who might be guilty of polluting the ballot-box. But the gentleman does not make such a case. In his report he utterly fails to do so.

Now let us go one step further. If the case which I put be true—that the contestee has an untainted, unpolluted majority of 800—are we to declare the seat vacant because he has been guilty of intimidation or fraud in the course of that election?

Mr. HAZELTON. I would like to ask the gentleman how the aggregate number of votes as counted compares with the census or registry of voters?

Mr. KEIFER. I am unable to answer that question; there may be other gentlemen who can answer it.

Mr. CALKINS. There was a very light vote throughout the district.

Mr. KEIFER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention again to this proposition whether it is within the power of the House, properly exercised, to say to a man who has been guilty of fraud in the conduct of his election which did not affect the result of the election, whether it is in the constitutional power of Congress, to declare the election was void. I undertake to say, Mr. Speaker, in the hundred years of our constitutional history, you cannot find a case where that position has been taken. I have examined the strongest case pointed out in the history of the country, the case of Abbott vs. Frost, which arose in the State of Massachusetts, on which the committee reported, and the House stood by the report, and held where the charge was one of bribery by one of the parties, and they could purge and purify the ballot-box by throwing out the bribed votes, that it was the duty of the House to do it. We have the more recent case of Platt against Goode, from Virginia, where the minority of the committee reported to the Forty-fourth Congress in favor of the sitting member, and reported that there had been bribery at a certain place, I think in Norfolk, Virginia, and they held it was their duty to come forward and purge that election of all bribery and count the unbribed votes. A different rule, Mr. Speaker, is claimed to exist in England.

Mr. BAKER. I have some familiarity with the two cases alluded to by the gentleman from Ohio, and I ask him to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly; but do not make a speech. If you wish to contradict this I will hear it.

Mr. BAKER. The question I wanted to submit was this: Whether, in either of those cases, there was any evidence adduced or any fact found by the committee that connected the sitting member, or the member who was adjudged entitled to the seat, with the fraud which was found to exist in the election; and whether or not the gentleman can point out a case where the party who claimed to be entitled to a seat upon the floor of this House is connected with fraud, you are to carefully tear off the fraud, so far as you can discover it, on the assumption he has done nothing but what you have been able to unearth? The rule is, where a man claims to be entitled to a seat on the floor of the House and has been connected with fraud, he is the man who is to come forward and show that all the votes he claims are fair and honest.

Mr. KEIFER. I have no objection to a question, but I do object to a speech. I take it the gentleman's position would be this, if he means to take any position at all, and I give it as an illustration, and that is in the case the return of a majority for a man was 3,000, and it was shown the man had bribed three voters only, then the burden was upon him to prove he was elected. That is the gentleman's position.

Now, take the first case, of Abbott against Frost, where the committee, without deciding whether or not the sitting member had been shown to have been guilty of bribery, but going on to state the law, say that the votes are to be thrown out, not that the sitting member is to be ousted from his seat; not that, but they say that ballots obtained through bribery ought to be disregarded. Then, to quote:

To count them in a general canvass is to place them on the same footing with the votes cast by the honest, free, and independent voter. To seat a member upon majorities obtained through such influences is to defeat the proper object for which the statute was created.

No, Mr. Speaker, the language here is "to seat a member upon majorities obtained through such influences." That leaves out of view the question, where a member does not obtain his majority through such means are we to say we would not seat him? If I understand the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana, it is to the effect that where a man has been guilty of bribery which does not affect the majority we are to resort to an absurdity and to stultify ourselves by saying still the man was not elected. It is a question of election, Mr. Speaker, we are trying now. We are inquiring as to the fact of election, not the fitness of a member to his seat.

Just one word further. It may occur to gentlemen that there would be some remedy for a case where a man has been guilty of fraud or violence, intimidation, bribery, or whatever else you choose to call it, and through that means does not secure his seat, but through that means taints himself and renders himself impure and unfit to hold a seat on this floor. If a case can be made—and I am not required to find that for the present—if a case is made against the sitting member, and it is shown he was guilty of gross fraud and violence, or of bribery or anything of that kind, the Constitution of the United States has probably pointed out to us our only remedy, and that is by expulsion.

It is said that in England they hold to the rule that where it is found a man has been guilty of bribery in his election to a seat in the House of Commons the election must be declared void, although the bribery did not affect the result, or, in other words, did not produce his majority. I do not think from an examination of parliamentary authorities that will be found to be true even in that country; but if it is, it is a rule which has grown up there where they have no written constitution to guide them in such cases. Then the rule might obtain in that country upon the theory that the man was elected, but still is unworthy to hold a seat, and, therefore, by means of an election contest he should be expelled. What we deal with here is a pure matter of election contest, and it is unfair to the sitting member to treat him as though he were on trial, with a view to his expulsion, when he should be entitled to a trial in a wholly different way for an offense which would justify his expulsion. In such case before he loses his seat here there must be a two-thirds vote against him, as provided in the fifth section, article 1, of the Constitution of the United States.

I do not find from the testimony in this case that Mr. Slemons has secured a majority of the votes for him by any of the means it is said were resorted to by him and his friends; and I undertake to say that no member of the committee found any such thing. I do undertake to say, though, Mr. Speaker, that the majority of the committee—those that signed the report proper without any qualification—did give to the contestant all that he could claim under his testimony, and then they found that if they did give him all the votes which he claimed he would still be defeated by over 800 majority. It is fair to say for the committee that they did not absolutely reject the testimony that was taken out of rule and out of time under the law. They did not reject that testimony, but they considered it in cutting down the returned majority from 2,800 votes to about 800. For my own part I wish to say that under all the circumstances I was in favor of considering that testimony, and it resulted in the entire testimony being considered by the whole committee, as will appear by looking at page 17 of the report.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? I understand that his argument is based upon this proposition and I wish to ask whether he is willing to state that this proposition is applicable to all such cases, namely: if there was intimidation and fraud in the election, it must nevertheless be shown affirmatively by competent evidence that enough votes were changed to affect the result.

Mr. KEIFER. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.

Mr. BOWMAN. But I wish to understand the gentleman's proposition. If I have understood his argument it is that no matter if there was intimidation and violence in the election, that unless you can identify the votes cast under intimidation and unless you prove that the result of the election was changed by these frauds it must stand as a valid election.

Mr. KEIFER. No, sir; I stated no such proposition. I submitted no general proposition of that kind. I did say that if the proof showed, after giving to the contestant everything he claimed on every hand and every vote he could claim was affected by his testimony, and then it appeared that the sitting member still had an untainted majority outside of that, it was not our duty—nay, our right—to vote the sitting member out of his seat. Now, if you undertake to infer a different proposition from what I have said, and state it as the distinguished gentleman has stated it, then I do not indorse it. I do not claim it is necessary to deal with anything beyond the testimony in this case. If from all the testimony in this case it is clear that the sitting member had an untainted majority, it is not our duty to oust him from his seat. I do regard it as absurd in the highest degree to say that a man has a majority rejecting everything to which he is not entitled, and yet at the same time resolve that that man was not elected. I say that is absurd.

As my colleague [Mr. CAMP] states here on my right, if he has committed that sort of flagrant crime which renders him unfit to hold a seat in this body, then the question may come up on a motion for expulsion under the Constitution of the United States. One gentleman asks if a man is responsible for the deeds of his party—during elections I suppose he means. To a certain extent he is; but if we are trying to see if he is guilty of the crimes which would render him unfit to hold a seat here as a member of this body, then we should have to go still further and prove by clear and satisfactory evidence that he was himself cognizant of the crimes which had been committed by his friends. Otherwise we cannot hold him responsible at all for it.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] desires a moment's time and I am willing to yield to him now.

Mr. SAWYER. I believe I am entitled to the floor.

Mr. WEAVER. I only want a moment to reply to some remarks of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SAWYER. I am unwilling to yield to the gentleman any longer. You said you only wanted ten minutes before and occupied nearly an hour. I yielded then upon the understanding that you were to speak ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. WEAVER. I did not occupy an hour.

Mr. SAWYER. I think the gentleman occupied nearly or fully an hour.

Mr. WEAVER. I desire now but a very short time, and besides I have the right to occupy a reasonable time on this matter and in this connection. I would like to ask the gentleman if he is opposed to having full and fair discussion of this case?

Mr. SAWYER. No, sir; I am not. That is just what I want.

Mr. WEAVER. Then, why do you object to allowing free debate upon it?

Mr. SAWYER. I am not disposed to cut off debate. I only suggested the gentleman has already occupied an hour.

Mr. WEAVER. I would like to ask the Speaker who has the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. SAWYER. If the gentleman from Iowa will indicate how much time he wants, I will yield to him for a while.

Mr. WEAVER. No, sir; I will not accept it out of your time; but I will out of the time of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEIFER. The time was yielded to me by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. CALKINS.]

Mr. HAYES. The hour of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COX.) The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] will proceed in the time of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. SAWYER.]

Mr. WEAVER. I will not take it out of his time. I propose to speak in the time of the gentleman from Indiana.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana yielded the floor absolutely.

Mr. MANNING. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SAWYER] has yielded ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa. If he is now permitted to go on, we will make some headway.

Mr. SAWYER. I desire to know whether when I yielded before to the gentleman from Iowa the time he occupied was taken from the time I was entitled to?

Mr. WEAVER. Certainly not. I spoke in my own right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri is entitled to one hour, being in charge of the majority report. The Chair has recognized him. Does he yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. WEAVER. The time I occupied before was not taken from the time of the gentleman from Missouri.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Of course not.

Mr. SAWYER. Then I yield to the gentleman ten minutes.

Mr. WEAVER. I wish to say a word or two in reply to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] and the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. KEIFER.] The gentleman from Ohio says that with a great deal of reluctance he signed this majority report. Now, I want to know why he was reluctant to sign it? If it was plain to the gentleman then as it is now that the contestee is entitled to his seat, should he not have signed that report not only without reluctance but with cheerfulness? I am of opinion that the reluctance was occasioned by the startling facts that I have alluded to, which have not been denied and will not be denied on this floor by any one; that in Jefferson County the contestant was deprived of the votes of four townships; in one township by a masked mob; in another by the ballot-box being thrown away; in another no return was ever made; and in still another by no return being made.

I do not ask that you shall give to the contestant the votes which those townships would have cast for him if there had been a fair election. What I claim is this, that the evidence establishes in the mind a moral conviction that the intimidation and frauds were so extensive in the three counties named as to make it reasonably certain that if a fair election had been held in those counties there would have been a different result. That is the position. It is not fair to say, giving him all these votes the contestee still has 800 majority. The correct position is, give the contestant what he was fairly entitled to in those three counties and then the majority is completely overcome. I have not claimed that the contestant should be seated for that reason; but I say that the fraud is so extensive as to vitiate the whole election. You cannot tell to what extent that fraud went; you only know it was very extensive. The testimony of Mr. Rogers, who was formerly a member of this House, a respectable witness, and of Snyder, is to the effect that if there had been a fair election in Jefferson County there would have been at least 2,500 majority in that county for the contestant. That is the testimony of these witnesses, both former members of this House, both residents for a quarter of a century of that State and of that congressional district.

And the testimony in regard to Chicot County is that if there had been a fair election there, there would have been between 1,200 and 1,500 majority for the contestant. In Hempstead County the facts are very like the other two counties.

The point I make, and I make it squarely, is that the testimony is such as to convince the mind that there was no fair election in that district. It is not fair to say that in the other seventeen counties there was a fair election. The evidence is quiet as to that. But the testimony shows that in these three counties, if there had been a fair election, the contestant would have been chosen to this House. And the fraud having been so extensive, in defense of the dignity of this House and the purity of the ballot-box this election should be referred again to the people in that congressional district.

The gentleman says there was a light vote in that district. Why was that? The evidence shows there was such an amount of intimidation as would produce a light vote. That fact is confirmatory of my position, not contradictory of it in the least.

I am very glad, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] has referred to the ballots that were printed after four o'clock at the Pine Bluff Press office. The law of Arkansas is that the polls shall close at sundown. The great preponderance of the testimony, as the gentleman from Indiana will admit, is to the effect that after dark, or about dark, after sundown, there were printed at the Pine Bluff Press office four thousand Slemmons tickets. They were printed after the polls closed, and for a purpose.

Mr. CALKINS. Will my colleague allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. WEAVER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CALKINS. As to the number of tickets and the time at which the tickets were printed, there is a conflict of testimony.

Mr. WEAVER. I admit there is a conflict of testimony, but the great preponderance of the testimony is in favor of what I have stated. The man himself who struck off the tickets, the foreman of the office, I believe, testified that it was after dark and between five and six o'clock. That was the testimony of the man who printed the tickets, and who was a supporter of Mr. Slemmons. That is his testimony and it will be taken as true.

Now, what were those tickets printed for if they were not to be used at that election? What were they for? They were printed after the polls were legally closed. Take that circumstance in connection with the others; with the intimidation and destruction of the ballot-box in one township; with the want of returns from other townships; the masked mob; the fraud in Chicot County—take in connection with those facts, I say, the circumstance of the printing of that number of tickets after the polls were closed, and it makes assurance doubly sure that every kind of fraud was being practiced there to an extent sufficient to vitiate this election.

It is not the law that you must find there were sufficient voters intimidated—[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" "Vote!"] Gentlemen, you will not get me off my feet by crying "Vote!" "Vote!" When my time is out I will sit down, and not before. It may be unpleasant for you to hear what I have to say, but you shall hear it as long as I have the right to the floor. [Cries of "Go on!"]

It is not the law, I say, that you must show sufficient fraud and intimidation to overcome every vote of the majority of the contestee. If the testimony is such as to convince the mind that there was no fair and free election in that district, then the American Congress would be justified, not only by law but by precedent and by the moral convictions of the country, in saying that the question shall be referred back to the voters of the district. There would be no wrong result to the contestee to refer this question back to the electors of the district.

I now yield the floor.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I trust the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SAWYER] will give way to a motion to adjourn. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. SAWYER. I am willing to conform to the wishes of the House in that regard.

Mr. McLANE. The gentleman yields to me to move that the House now adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was taken by a viva voce vote.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. McLANE. I will withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. ATHERTON. I renew the motion.

Mr. SAWYER. It is perfectly immaterial to me whether the House adjourns now or not.

Mr. ATHERTON. How long does the gentleman expect to occupy the floor?

Mr. SAWYER. Perhaps twenty minutes.

Mr. ATHERTON. I will not insist on the motion.

Mr. BAYNE. If the gentleman will yield to me I will move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. SAWYER. I have said it is perfectly immaterial to me; I am willing to yield to the pleasure of the House. A part of the House seems to be anxious to adjourn. I do not desire to occupy exceeding fifteen or twenty minutes, and it is perfectly immaterial to me whether I proceed now or to-morrow morning. [Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. SAWYER. I see that the House is very impatient over this case and anxious for a speedy close of the argument upon it in order that it may come to a vote. In view of that fact I will proceed now and endeavor to be very brief in what I say, confining myself entirely to the law and the testimony of the case.

So far as the insinuation has been thrown out here that any member of the Committee on Elections or the democratic party of this House is not in favor of free and fair elections I repel it. I say that if there is any man on this floor who is in favor of and who has always maintained the principle of a free and fair election, I am the man. I never yet have yielded nor will I ever yield in my devotion to that principle to any man on this floor.

A reason may be found for the vote that was given in the second congressional district of Arkansas which I would not have alluded to but for the remarks that have fallen from the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WEAVER.] I had not intended to allude to it. But I can show, and show from the testimony in this case, that there are other and better reasons than any that have been given why the contestant did not receive the majority of the votes cast in that congressional district.

Why was it? It was because he was repudiated, absolutely repudiated, by the best members of the republican party. He had denied his allegiance to that party. He had denounced both the republican party and democratic party and denied his allegiance to either of them. In that may be found the reason why he did not receive the vote of the republicans.

I desire to refer to the testimony in support of this proposition, and not leave it to rest simply upon my individual statement. By turning to page 66 of the record will be found the testimony of George W. Prigmore. I quote from his testimony:

Question. What are your politics?

Answer. Republican.

Q. You stated in one of your answers on yesterday that Bradley possessed no stability of character politically speaking; why do you say it?

A. Well, I say so because I have known him since 1867, and during that whole time he has not belonged or affiliated with any one political party further than during one campaign, sometimes taking both sides of the issue before the campaign closed.

That is the testimony of a republican as to the political character of this man who comes here now contesting the seat of the sitting member. That republican tells you that Bradley belonged to neither political party, that he affiliated with neither, and that he denounced both during the same campaign. But that is not all. On page 75 will be found the testimony of George Haycock. I quote from his testimony:

Question. What are your politics?

Answer. I am a republican, and have been ever since Fremont ran for President.

Q. What influence, if any, had the compromise of the previous county campaign on that congressional election?

A. It had but very little.

Q. What position did the republican voters take in that election?

A. Quite a number that I had conversed with and I had expressed myself to thought as I did, that they would a thousand times prefer to vote for an out-and-out democrat than to vote for a man that we could not rely on politically.

Q. Who did you regard as such a man as that?

A. John M. Bradley, the contestant.

Q. Why did you think so?

A. Because he had been a candidate for Congress on the republican ticket, and two years thereafter canvassed for Colonel SLEMONS against John M. Clayton, a republican, for Congress.

Q. Was Clayton a regular republican nominee?

A. He was.

There you have the testimony of another republican as to the political status of this man who comes here now seeking the seat of Mr. Slemmons, claiming at the same time that he was a republican candidate and that the republicans were all united for him.

I read from the deposition of H. King White:

Question. Are you acquainted with the influence of John M. Bradley in Jefferson County?

Answer. I never heard of him having any, politically, religiously, or morally, in this county.

I calculate that there were two thousand republican votes in the county not offered on that day at all. Never since the separation of the State and congressional elections has the republican party polled its full strength in a congressional election; Clayton did not receive it in 1874, nor Snyder in 1876.

Clayton was a brother of Ex-Senator Clayton, of Arkansas.

I read from the deposition of the same witness on page 98:

Q. You state in your examination in chief that Mr. Bradley is regarded as exceedingly unreliable in politics. Has he ever been regarded as a democrat?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When?

A. In the fall and winter of 1868. Bradley had to flee his own county, as he supposed, to avoid capture at the hands of Clayton's militia on account of being a klu-klux democrat. In 1874 he made the canvass with and for Slemmons, democratic nominee for Congress in the second congressional district, against John M. Clayton, the regular republican nominee, and in 1876 he made the canvass for and with Slemmons in the same district against O. P. Snyder, who claimed to be the republican candidate, and in 1878 he started out to make the canvass and write letters, which were published in the interest of Slemmons, to obtain the democratic nomination for the said Slemmons, one of which letters was written from the law office of Johnson & Bradley, in the city of Pine Bluff, and published in the Pine Bluff Press, which was next door to the law office of the said Bradley & Johnson, for which the said Bradley demanded and received the sum of $50, claiming the same from the said Slemmons as expenses in making the trip to the county of Bradley, in said district, which he never made.

Q. How, then, do you know that Bradley wrote it?

A. He told me so, by way of apologizing for opposing me in the same canvass.

Q. When and where?

A. At his office in the city of Pine Bluff, I think about the latter part of July or August.

Q. How do you know he charged $50 for writing that letter, claiming it to be for expenses to Bradley County?

A. He claimed in trying to secure my support as a candidate for Congress that he had never done anything in that canvass in the interest of Slemmons, except to write this one letter which had been written as coming from Bradley County, which he said was written in his office. I charged him then and there with having made a trip to Bradley County in the interest of Slemmons, which he unequivocally denied. I said to him, "Bradley, Slemmons's friends claim you received $50 from him to make a trip to Bradley County and work up his interests there;" to which he responded, "Well, be that as it may, I did not go to Bradley County," or words of like import.

He got the money for going and then did not go. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would not have alluded to this branch of the case but for the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WEAVER.] I think by this time the House will understand why Mr. Bradley did not receive the full republican vote. Every witness who has testified in this case has without exception stated that the full republican vote was not cast in that county; some witnesses say that not one-half was cast; some say from one-half to two-thirds was cast. Mr. Bradley was not the nominee of the republican party; he had not been nominated by that or by the greenback party. Upon an examination of the testimony you will find that a dozen of the most prominent and influential republicans in Jefferson County are named as supporters of Mr. Slemmons; but when witnesses on the other side are asked as to democrats supporting Mr. Bradley, they cannot name a single one.

We thus find the reason why Mr. Bradley failed of success. In the first place, he was distrusted by the republican party. He had only the greenback party for his actual support, and, as testified by Mr. H. King White, there was no greenback party in that district.

I waive entirely the question as to the legality of the testimony taken in Chicot and Hempstead Counties. It has been truly stated upon this floor that this testimony was taken out of time. It was taken after the expiration of the forty days allowed to the contestant in which to take his testimony in chief, those forty days commencing from the service of the answer of the contestee upon the contestant. The testimony shows that the answer was served on the 29th of January, 1879; the time of contestant, therefore, expired on the 10th of March following. In Jefferson County he concluded his testimony within the time allowed. But in Chicot and Hempstead Counties he commenced taking testimony on the 20th of March, and continued until the 29th, when he closed. He commenced ten days after the expiration of the time allowed him for taking his testimony in chief.

Now I desire to call the attention of the House to another fact. Upon examination of the report, it will be found that the entire time consumed by the contestant in taking his testimony (not only that which was taken outside of the prescribed time, but that which was taken within the time allowed) was only eighteen days—less than one-half the time allowed by law. The record shows no reason, no excuse, for taking this testimony in Chicot and Hempstead Counties beyond the time. I say that if ever there was a case presented to the House which deserved reprobation in this particular—if ever there was a case in which the evidence deserved to be excluded, this is such a case. And if you throw out this testimony, the contestant has no standing whatever. But I waive that. I take that testimony and consider it, I consider the entire testimony and give him all that he or any of his friends can claim, and then I say Slemmons is entitled to his seat by from 500 to 1,000 majority. According to the testimony of his own witnesses, Graves and Wilkinson—Graves and Wilkinson are two of his witnesses—according to their testimony the republican majority in Chicot County was 1,200. Both agree on that, that the republican majority in Chicot County was 1,200. In Chicot County these fraudulent posters were circulated.

Now, before I go to that I desire to say a word as to the connection of Mr. Slemmons with these posters. What is the evidence? I will read every word of it. I defy any gentleman on this floor to point to one fact or circumstance I shall not name which will tend to connect Mr. Slemmons with that transaction. I say attention was not called to it, but I desire to call attention to the report and to the language of the report in relation to that transaction:

The object was evidently to deceive the republican party in that county, and thus induce that vote to be cast for Williams, and to lessen the vote it was supposed would otherwise have been cast for contestant. It was a shallow device, dishonorable to those engaged in the transaction, and deserves the emphatic condemnation of every friend of free and fair elections; and if the testimony was sufficient to establish the complicity of contestant with an act so dishonorable, and we were satisfied that its effect upon the voters produced a result different from that which otherwise would have occurred, we would not hesitate to recommend that the election be set aside and a new one ordered.

There is the language of the committee on that transaction, and now the gentleman from Iowa talks about this unfair election, and about this report as attempting to seat a man who was not entitled to it according to the testimony. That committee were unanimous on the question. If it could have been shown Mr. Slemmons was connected with that transaction that report would have been entirely different, and I am not sure if it would not have been different even if the result could have been shown to be different from what it otherwise would have been. So decided was that committee against such a transaction as that they would have gone far to set aside that election if testimony would have at all warranted it.

What is the testimony in regard to Mr. Slemmons's connection with that matter? There are three facts. In the first place, those posters were printed at a democratic printing office, and it is supposed they were printed at the instance of one of Mr. Slemmons's friends. Admit that. That very man who is suspected to have caused those posters to have been printed and circulated on his oath said he had no conversation with Mr. Slemmons about it. Then it was not done at the instance of Mr. Slemmons, and he had nothing to do with the printing or circulation of those posters.

In the next place, it was said they were sent to the Planters' House at Pine Bluff, where Mr. Slemmons was then stopping as a guest. No connection is shown on his part with that transaction; they were only left at the same hotel where he was stopping. That is one of the strong circumstances alluded to by my friend from Iowa to show that Mr. Slemmons had connection with the transaction. It is the second one. Richard H. Dawson, a colored man, circulated these posters in the county of Chicot. They were circulated nowhere else. They were circulated in no other county in the district. That is not pretended. He circulated them in Chicot County, and before he started from Pine Bluff to go to Chicot County he was seen conversing with Mr. Slemmons on the platform at the depot. Not one word in regard to what that conversation related to. Mr. Slemmons denies he knew anything about it. Yet, sir, on that testimony, the gentleman from Iowa said he could convict a man of horse-stealing; I say, Mr. Speaker, that is slim evidence indeed. There is not a circumstance there except the one fact that he was seen talking with Dawson on the platform. That has no significance whatever; and, in the absence of testimony showing what that conversation related to, I say that it amounts to nothing at all.

There is the testimony and the whole of it, and there is no other particle in the record showing any connection on Mr. Slemmons's part with the matter.

But why did they not examine Dawson as a witness? He was accessible to them. They knew the testimony was weak. There was Dawson, the man who circulated the posters, and he could, if anybody could, have proven the whole thing.

Mr. WEAVER. Why did you not call Dawson?

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Slemmons was not called upon to do so because you had not made out even a prima facie case.

Mr. RICHMOND. You made the charge. Why did you not establish it? It was your duty to do so.

Mr. SAWYER. The testimony of two witnesses on the part of the contestant show the republican majority in Chicot County was about twelve hundred. I take their testimony and allow twelve hundred votes; although the testimony does not show or tend to show those posters led to any confusion. Ninety votes were the number Williams, the fraudulent candidate, received in that county. He did not receive a vote outside of it. The entire evidence shows, and I call the attention of the House to it, there was not in any county in the district over one-half or two-thirds of the full vote cast. A fuller vote was cast in Jefferson, Chicot, and Hempstead Counties, where the testimony was taken, than in any other in the district; certainly in Jefferson County where these great frauds were committed there was a greater vote than in any other.

Mr. HOUSE. How many votes did Mr. Williams get?

Mr. SAWYER. Ninety; and that in Chicot County.

Now, the testimony both of republicans and democrats shows that there was no excitement in that canvass. There was no electioneering, Bradley having made the only speech during the canvass, and there was nothing to draw the people out, and especially would they not come out to vote for a man of Bradley's political status. Therefore it was not an exciting time. There was very little excitement in connection with the election.

Now, what is the testimony in regard to the election in Ozan Township? There was no election held in that township, and the reason given in the testimony is that there were no election officers appointed, or judges of election. The testimony shows that there were no judges of election, but that there were three United States deputy marshals there, and the sheriff of the county was there, and yet they did not know that under the law of Arkansas they could make the poll-books and hold the elections. There was no pretense that there was any intimidation, or fraud, or anything else to prevent the election from being held. All the witnesses testified that there was nothing of the kind, but that everything was fair, and that there was no disturbance whatever in that township of Ozan. Bradley's vote I estimate at 200, that is, giving him the entire republican vote claimed in the township. The witnesses testified that if there had been an election Bradley would probably have received 200 votes in that precinct. When the question was asked how many votes Slemmons would have received, the witness could not say, but I give Bradley the entire number of votes claimed for that township, and also that Slemmons would not have received one at that precinct.

In Saline Township the conditions were precisely the same. There was no election held there. The judges were not there, though the ballot-boxes had been delivered, but they could not be found, and the testimony of their own witnesses shows that upon a full vote and a fair count of that township Bradley would have received 175 votes. I give him that majority there. That closes Chicot and Hempstead Counties.

Now we come to Jefferson County. In Melton Township, the testimony shows that the colored men there at the polls threatened to arrest one of the judges and break up the election just before sundown. They were colored men; and yet the gentleman from Iowa would have us to infer that this was done by the democrats. The testimony shows, however, that threats were made by the colored men; that they threatened to arrest Mr. Currie, one of the judges of election, and also that they had their guns stacked within convenient distance of the election place. The consequence was that the judges were afraid to remain on the ground; and Currie testified that the entire vote—and the polls were just ready to close—was 115; about, he says, 115. Now, I give 115 votes to Mr. Bradley, and I do not claim a vote there for Mr. Slemmons. I give them all to him. Bradley's friends surrounded the polls, and the deputy marshal that attempted to arrest the judge of election was a greenbacker. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. MANNING. Gentlemen on the other side cry "vote" now, when the gentleman from Missouri is beginning to make a statement about the republican attempt to carry off the ballot-box.

Mr. BAKER. That is astonishing that the republicans would steal a ballot-box from their own stronghold. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANNING. Gentlemen, however, seem very anxious now to put a stop to the statement of this case.

Mr. SAWYER. In Dunnington Township, Jefferson County, the testimony shows that it was a democratic township, and there was no election held there, for the ballot-boxes were not there. In Barroque Township there is a small republican majority. On page 92 you will find the testimony. I offset Dunnington against Barroque Township and then pass to the rest. In Washington Township an election was held and everything proceeded fairly. There was no interruption at all during the day, none whatever. When the polls had closed, after a full and fair election, one of the judges started for Pine Bluff with the ballot-boxes, and was assaulted by armed men on the way, and the ballot-boxes taken away from him. The testimony shows that the gentleman was asked, "Do you know who it was that assaulted you?" His answer was, "I do not know who they were." "To what party did they belong?" "I do not know." There is the testimony, and yet the democrats are to be held responsible for taking away that ballot-box when there is not a particle of evidence in support of the claim that it was done by them. In the face of this fact that there is no evidence and no testimony in support of the allegation, they yet say that the democratic party is responsible for taking away that ballot-box.

And not only that, but the testimony also shows on page 92 that the democratic and republican parties in that township were about equal. So nothing can be gained upon that point for either party.

Now I desire to call attention to another point. A good deal has been said, especially by my friend from Iowa, [Mr. WEAVER,] in regard to what took place in Vaugine Township, in Jefferson County. I desire to call attention to the testimony on that point. And the entire testimony on that subject, bear in mind, was given for the contestant. The contestant examined nine witnesses from Vaugine Township, and of only one did he inquire a word in regard to the conduct of that election and the intimidation of voters. And that witness was Mr. Rogers, the only one out of nine who were examined to whom he put a single question in relation to that matter. I want to show what his testimony is:

Question. State what you know of the manner of conducting the said election in Vauquise Township, in this county.

Answer. I was in the court-yard, where the election of said township was held, early in the morning of that election day, and saw that there was a feeling of intimidation among many of those whom I met upon the streets, caused in part, as I supposed, by the arrest of a United States supervisor of election in an adjoining township, who was under arrest and in the hands of an officer upon or near the court-yard. Colonel Bradley and myself inquired into the cause of the arrest, and receiving no satisfactory answer, repaired to the office of the magistrate whom we understood had issued the warrant, accompanied by the constable and the party arrested, and demanded a trial; this was refused; bail was offered, and it, too, refused; then, returning to the court-yard, the hour for opening the election having arrived, we sought entrance to the court-house door where the election was to be held and found the door locked. We were followed closely by a leading democrat.

That was the intimidation.

We then went to the clerk's office and found it also locked; after an interval of twenty minutes, perhaps, we returned to the door of the court-house and found it still locked; met a voter inquiring if the polls were open; he retired; we then went to the clerk's office, saw the deputy clerk just entering the door, and asked him where the poll-books were, and if he did not intend to hold an election; the same leading democrat alluded to following close behind, and demanded to know what right we had to poll-books. I said none, but simply wanted to know if they intended to open the polls and hold the election.

That is all the evidence there is in regard to intimidation in Vauquise Township. That is all the evidence in relation to this matter of the only witness examined by the contestant upon the subject at all. And yet after hearing the eloquent remarks of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] you would suppose that this book of testimony was full of intimidation, and that the evidence was clear and uncontradicted. But even this evidence is contradicted by the testimony of two witnesses who were there at that time. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. REED. I ask the gentleman from Missouri whether he will now yield for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. SAWYER. If the House will indulge me ten or fifteen minutes longer I will hurry through.

Mr. WHITE. I hope the gentleman will yield for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. ATKINS. If we cannot take a vote to-night I think the gentleman should yield for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. SAWYER. I will do so.

Mr. REED. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MAXEY. I call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to the fact that there is a bill already pending on the Calendar to accomplish that very object, having been reported favorably from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. WINDOM. I understand the Senator, but I do not know whether this bill covers the same points. Possibly it does; but let the bill go to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, if there be no objection.

Mr. MAXEY. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

LOUISIANA SENATORIAL INVESTIGATION.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to a matter which I deem a matter of privilege. A sub-committee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections sat in New Orleans during a portion of the months of November and December, and took evidence, or what by courtesy is called evidence, in the Kellogg-Spofford case. Mr. Spofford, the contestant, introduced as a witness in his behalf a gentleman named E. L. Weber, the same Weber who became somewhat notorious some years ago by reason of the testimony he gave before the Potter committee.

Mr. Weber appeared before the committee and went on the stand, according to my recollection, about two o'clock in the afternoon of Saturday. He was examined in chief by the Senator from Georgia, Mr. HILL, the chairman of the sub-committee. His testimony was what the newspapers would call "important if true." After the examination in chief was completed, I stated that I preferred not to cross-examine him until the stenographic notes of his testimony should be written out by the stenographer, so that I could have the testimony before me to guide and direct me in the cross-examination, and I asked that the cross-examination might be postponed until his testimony could be written out. The request was readily acceded to by my associates on the committee. Mr. Weber then addressing himself to me inquired if the cross-examination could be completed that day. I stated, in substance, that I did not think it could be. He then stated that he was engaged in business at Donaldsonville, where he resides; that the next day, Sunday, was the best business day of the week, and that he desired very much to be at home in order to attend to his business. After some conversation between the witness and the members of the committee it was agreed that he might go home that day, Saturday afternoon, with the understanding that he would return to New Orleans and submit himself to examination the next Monday morning, he stating that he could arrive there, according to my recollection, about eleven o'clock.

Mr. CONKLING. What was his business?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. He is a merchant at Donaldsonville.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. That is right, at eleven o'clock.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Donaldsonville is situated, as you all know, on the Mississippi River some sixty or eighty miles, I do not know the exact distance, above New Orleans. It is connected with New Orleans both by the river and by railroad. He did not return on Monday. I made inquiry concerning him either on Monday or Tuesday, and it was stated by Mr. Walker, the counsel for Mr. Spofford, that Weber had sent word to some person in New Orleans, who had communicated that intelligence to Mr. Walker, that when he arrived at home he found his clerk drunk, not attending to business, and his wife and children sick. I remarked at the time that I discredited the statement because it was not likely that so many misfortunes would come down upon him at the same time.

The sub-committee remained in New Orleans and continued to take testimony, I think until Wednesday evening or Thursday of that week. Mr. Weber did not appear again before the sub-committee. I stated before the sub-committee adjourned that if Weber did not appear for cross-examination I would move before the full committee, after the sub-committee returned to Washington, to strike out his testimony. There was no action taken upon the matter by the sub-committee. The sub-committee returned to Washington and the investigation was pursued by the full Committee on Privileges and Elections. Mr. Shellabarger, who appeared before the committee as the counsel for the sitting Senator, Mr. KELLOGG, moved for an attachment against Weber as a witness in contempt. The committee, according to my recollection, unanimously were of the opinion that he was entitled to such attachment. Thereupon the counsel for Mr. Spofford, Mr. Merrick, stated that he was very anxious to bring the examination of witnesses to a close, and that if the issuing of the attachment were not insisted upon he would consent that the testimony of Weber might be stricken from the record. There was considerable discussion over the matter, and it was finally agreed by the committee unanimously, and with the assent of the sitting Senator, Mr. KELLOGG, and the contestant, Mr. Spofford, that the testimony of Weber should be stricken from the record, and such an order was thereupon made. I said then, "The testimony of Weber will not appear in the volume of printed testimony." Some member of the committee remarked, "Certainly not; the committee has stricken it from the record."

Day before yesterday the volume of testimony in the Kellogg-Spofford case was placed upon our tables. I looked it through, and you may imagine my surprise when I found, commencing on page 860 and closing on page 865, the testimony of Mr. Weber in full. I looked to see whether there was any foot-note showing that the testimony of Weber had been stricken from the record. I looked to see if there were any lines drawn across it to show that it was not a part of the record. I did not find them; but finally I found on the last page of the printed volume before the index this note:

The testimony of E. L. Weber, pages 860 to 865, is stricken from the record by order of the committee.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It is on the last page before the index, page 1239.

After this statement which I now make, and after a reference to the action of the committee in regard to the testimony of Weber, it can do no injury to Mr. KELLOGG, so far as the Senate is concerned; but this volume of printed evidence will go into the public and private libraries of the country; it will be read by thousands who never will hear this statement which I now make, and whose attention will never be called to the note on the last page of the printed volume in which it is stated, and correctly stated, that Weber's testimony was stricken from the record.

I do not know whose duty it was to see that this testimony did not appear in the volume of printed testimony. It certainly was the duty of some one to see that it was actually and in fact stricken out and excluded from the volume of printed testimony.

I desire simply to call attention to this matter at this time in order that the sitting Senator [Mr. KELLOGG] may not be prejudiced by the testimony of Weber.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to say that the statement of facts made by the Senator from Wisconsin as to what occurred in New Orleans is correct. So far as the printing of this testimony is concerned, even conceding that Weber's statements ought to have been manually stricken from the record, I have only to say that I am not aware that any member of the committee had anything to do with supervising the printing. I am sure I have never regarded that I had anything to do with it. I was not the chairman of the committee here at all, and the order to strike out this testimony was made here in general committee. I had nothing whatever to do with it, nor did I give any order in connection with the printing of the testimony, except at the request of the sitting member, conveyed to me through the chairman, that he should be allowed to have slips of the testimony as rapidly as the proof was corrected and printed. He made that request, I understood, and I stated in committee that that request was granted. That is all I have had to do in connection with the printing.

There are one or two facts that the Senator has forgotten, I apprehend. Some time after we arrived from New Orleans he asked me if I did not think Weber was in contempt and ought to be attached. I promptly said to him that I thought he was, and, if the Senator desired, I would sustain him in any movement to attach Weber. I thought Weber's conduct was inexcusable, and he ought to be brought before the committee and cross-examined to the Senator's satisfaction. I have no doubt the Senator will remember that.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Certainly; I remember it.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. There was no request, that I remember, for an attachment. My understanding of Judge Shellabarger's motion was that Weber should either be attached or his testimony stricken from the record. I was very clearly of the opinion that one or the other ought to be done. This man had been before the committee; he had undergone a direct examination, and the Senator from Wisconsin very reasonably, I thought, said that he could not cross-examine him until the testimony was written out.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention to one fact?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I will get to that fact, no doubt.

Mr. LOGAN. It is in reference to the Senator's statement that no request was made.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I say I will get to that fact if the Senator will allow me to go on.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I have no doubt it is on pages 1185 and 1186, what I am going to call attention to. It is wholly a matter of indifference whether the counsel asked for an attachment or not. It is a matter of great indifference, for every member of the committee was ready either to grant him an attachment or to strike the testimony from the record.

But I was going on to say that this man appeared before the committee at New Orleans and was examined directly. The Senator from Wisconsin very reasonably asked that he should have time to have the testimony written out in order to cross-examine him. We all concurred in that. It was at Weber's own request that he was excused until Monday at eleven o'clock. He did not return. There were some ideas in the minds of members of the committee at New Orleans that the sub-committee could not attach anybody or bring him back. I myself felt strongly inclined to send for him and bring him, if I had been asked, because I wanted everybody to have a fair chance. So from the beginning I was willing that this testimony should be stricken out or the witness attached and brought before the committee, and I was perfectly willing that the sitting member and his friends should determine which remedy they would have. I would have voted for either very cheerfully.

I think about the 15th of January, long after the testimony had all been printed, this question came before the committee, and the Senator has omitted to read what the committee did. He has simply read the foot-note on the last page. If the Senator will turn to page 1185 he will find what occurred before the committee. It is printed in the record, and shows that whoever did superintend this printing had no disposition to do any injustice to anybody. On page 1185, at the bottom, you will find this:

Mr. Shellabarger, counsel for the sitting member, submitted to the committee, without argument, objection previously made by him to the testimony of E. L. Weber, taken by the sub-committee in New Orleans, without the cross-examination having been pursued on behalf of the sitting member.

Mr. Merrick, counsel for the memorialist, submitted the matter to the committee without argument.

Upon the question being put to the committee, the testimony of E. L. Weber was unanimously stricken from the record.

That ought to satisfy anybody. But before this order was passed the testimony had been printed. That was the trouble, I suppose. I am not a printer, and I do not know anything about it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Does the Senator understand that it could not be excluded from this printed volume after it was printed in leaves, as we had it before the committee?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I do not know. My understanding is that it was printed before that.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I do not know whether it was or not. I was told—

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Oh, yes; this order was on the 15th of January. You will remember that the testimony taken in New Orleans was before us, I think, long before that, printed; but the printer can answer. I do not know anything about that. That is my recollection.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I stated the substance of what appears on the page to which the Senator now calls the attention of the Senate, that the committee agreed to strike from the record the testimony of Weber, and what I complain of is that it is not in fact stricken from the record, but that it now appears as a part of the printed volume of testimony.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The Journal shows, the proceedings of the committee show, that it was ordered to be stricken out and is therefore not in testimony. I do not suppose any Senator will be deceived. I do not know whether it should have been manually stricken out, whether the type should have been taken down or not. My understanding is (though I know nothing in the world about printing) that this testimony was set up in sticks, that it was first printed for the use of the committee, that the type is preserved or a sufficient number of copies stricken off for the whole Senate when it is stricken off for the committee, and that when the testimony is finally closed they simply stitch the copies together and send it to the Senate. That was my idea. That was why I stated a week ago last Monday that I supposed the testimony was already printed; and you will find in the RECORD that I made that statement. Although it had only been ordered to be printed for the committee, I supposed that really it had been printed for the whole Senate. I suppose that is just the way it occurred, that the type had already been set up, the matter had already been printed for the committee; and the Public Printer, or the stenographer, or whoever had supervision of it, simply did not take down the type. If it could have been done, he ought to have done it unquestionably. I think it would have been better; but I have noticed in a great many cases that that is the way it is done. When testimony is ordered to be stricken out, it is no longer evidence; and whether it is manually stricken out or not, I do not think makes much difference. As illustrative of that I would call attention to another thing. Some complaint was made of some affidavits. The committee, a majority at least, established a rule in New Orleans that ex parte affidavits were not admissible unless made by persons who were charged to be parties to the crime being investigated, that the outside ex parte affidavits of citizens could not be admitted, because the party involved was entitled to a cross-examination; but that the affidavit of a party to the conspiracy, a party to the crime charged, could be admitted simply as an admission by a party to the fact; and the circumstance that it was put in the form of a written affidavit did not destroy its character as an admission.

Mr. CARPENTER rose.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I do not want to go into a discussion now. I am simply stating the facts.

Mr. CARPENTER. I want to know the fact under discussion.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. We regarded every man who received a bribe as a party to the crime, as well as the man who paid it.

Mr. CARPENTER. As entitled to the privilege of being considered a party to the crime!

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I will not undertake to determine that very nice question, whether it be of politics or casuistry.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I will say here, to preserve my reputation as a lawyer if I have any, that I dissented from that ruling of the committee.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I said it was the act of a majority. I do the justice to the Senator from Wisconsin of saying that he dissented from almost everything that was done, and really he is not to blame. He was a general dissenter. There is no doubt about that. I think he was the head of the dissenters at New Orleans.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The only one.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. He dissented from everything except something that was on his side, and I never heard him dissent from anything that was.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I dissent from that statement now.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I do not mean to be offensive to the Senator; but I want to call attention to the fact that somehow or other two affidavits got into the record that were not admissible under that rule. They were the affidavits of persons who were not members of the Legislature, and not officers of the Legislature, and in no way connected with the crime charged, which was charged to be a conspiracy. Attention was called to the fact in New Orleans that two affidavits had gotten in. It was called in this way: It seems that the Senator from Wisconsin offered to introduce the affidavit of a Mr. Magloire, who was no member of the Legislature and was an outside person.

Mr. KELLOGG. No; he was a member of the Legislature.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. That was objected to. I do not remember who he was; but he certainly was not a party to any crime charged, so far as I know.

Mr. KELLOGG. He was one of the parties actually charged with receiving a bribe.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I do not wish any statement from the sitting member. I am going to read from the record:

Senator HILL. I said I would admit the affidavits of parties who were parties to corruption, and those affidavits only are admissible.

Senator CAMERON. I move, then, to rule them out.

That is, attention was called to the affidavits of Franklin and Kelley, who were not parties to the corruption, and when that rule was restated the Senator from Wisconsin simply said:

I move, then, to rule them out.

Senator HILL. I think they ought to be if they are outside parties and were at the time.

Senator CAMERON. I move, then, to strike them from the records, the affidavits of Kelley and Franklin.

Senator HILL. Strike them out, Mr. Stenographer, all the affidavits, those of Benjamin Franklin and James Kelley.

The objection to the affidavit of Pierre McGloire was thereupon sustained.

So he must have been, I suppose, not a member. I do not know whether the affidavits of Franklin and Kelley appear in this printed record or not, but I believe they do.

Mr. LOGAN. They do.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I have not seen them, but I will say that they were ordered to be stricken out, and the order is here in the printed record. So very clearly neither the testimony of Weber nor the affidavits of these witnesses are evidence.

I will call attention to another fact, that in looking at the index I have been unable to find this testimony, because it is not indexed. I do not see that either the affidavit of Franklin and Kelley or the testimony of Weber has been indexed. I suppose the gentleman who indexed the testimony knew that was not testimony and did not index it. I therefore was at some trouble in finding any of this testimony.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will look in the index he will find the reference to Kelley and Jeremiah Blackstone on page 1256; he will find that their affidavits are indexed.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I looked at page 1256 and it appears to me the affidavits are not indexed.

Mr. LOGAN. Page 1253, I should have said.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The affidavits of Blackstone, De Lacy, Flanagan, Johnson, Jones, Milon, Seveignes, and McGuire are stated. I did not look at page 1252.

Mr. LOGAN. On page 689 you will find these affidavits annexed. Mr. HILL, of Georgia. They may be there, but they were ordered to be stricken out. They are no part of this record.

Mr. CARPENTER rose.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I advise my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] to be patient. I have seen men lose their strength by being too impatient sometimes. Let us be patient. The contest as to what this evidence does amount to is going to come up by and by, and we will not be determined just yet. I say very cheerfully that the testimony of Weber is no part of the evidence reported by the committee. It was ordered to be stricken out here by the general committee, and I respond this morning because the chairman of the committee is not here—yes, I see he is here, but I did not know that he was here when the question arose—and because the testimony was taken in New Orleans, and because I have seen a spiteful reference to this thing in connection with myself. The affidavits are not testimony either, and the record shows that they were stricken out. I believe they nevertheless appear, but I do not know anything about it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I simply desire to say in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin that it was somebody's duty to have seen that this matter was stricken out; that it has always been usual, I believe, on the part of this committee, to intrust entirely to the stenographer the superintendence of printing the testimony which is taken by it. I am sure that there was no disposition on the part of any member of the committee to have incorporated in the record of testimony anything that by the action of the committee had been excluded. If there had been any duty devolved on any member of the committee in reference to the particular testimony taken at New Orleans, it would have devolved on the sub-committee appointed to go to New Orleans. The general committee itself conceded to the sub-committee after going to New Orleans the right and propriety of superintending the further investigation after they returned to Washington. As the chairman of the committee, I requested—

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him whether he would have any objection to having this testimony stricken out so that it shall not form a part of the permanent record of the Senate in relation to this matter?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Not the least objection in the world. The only difficulty is that I do not see how you are to do it without printing anew the entire testimony. The testimony taken by the sub-committee in New Orleans was in type, I presume, at the time the order of the committee was made to strike this out of the record, and I suppose that was the reason why it was not omitted from the record, the type already having been set up and a sufficient number of copies printed for the use of the committee, and perhaps a greater number, though I do not know anything about that, because it has never been customary with that committee to pay any attention personally to the superintendence of the printing of testimony. It has been left to the stenographer to superintend the printing of testimony so far as I have known in every investigation before the committee. Personally, I am sure that I gave no attention to it as chairman of the committee. If it had devolved upon me, and the committee had expressed a wish that I should personally give some attention to it, I would have done so; but I did not understand that that was any part of my duty as chairman of the committee.

The suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin that some person ought to have attended to this matter left an implication, perhaps, that the chairman of the committee might have attended to it, whereas it was certainly understood that the superintendence of the investigation of the Louisiana case, having been submitted to the sub-committee, it should be under the control of that sub-committee when the examination was resumed in Washington.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I think it is due to the Official Stenographer of the Senate to say that neither he nor any of his force is responsible for the evidence that was taken before the sub-committee in New Orleans.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Nor here either, after we came back.

Mr. INGALLS. And that if any mistake or error has occurred, it is not due to any member of his staff.

It seems to me very strange if the statement of the Senator from Georgia is true, and this testimony was ordered to be stricken out, and it appears wrongfully in this volume, and as appears from the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin that it is prejudicial in some way to the Senator from Louisiana, that the Senate should hesitate upon the expenditure of a few dollars, as to whether this record should import verity or not. I understand that the usual custom is to print 1,900 copies of this document for the use of the Senate and House of Representatives and for distribution through the various Departments of the Government. This allows three copies to each member of the Senate, and one to each member of the House. The rest are distributed through the Interior Department and other branches of the Government for distribution to the public libraries of the country.

That course has not been taken, and it will not cost to exceed $2,000 or $3,000 at the outside, to do justice and have the absolute truth in this matter, and it seems to me that, rather than discuss the question whether or not this shall be considered as evidence in regard to the right of the Senator from Louisiana to his seat or not, the Senate should take immediate steps to see that its records are correct, that these incorrect records of this testimony should be withdrawn, and that the testimony as it was really taken before the committee should be set up in the printing office and distributed as the committee finally ordered it to appear. I do not know what course the Senator from Wisconsin chooses to take, but it seems to me that a motion should be made promptly that this record should be withdrawn and those offensive portions should be stricken out, and that the proper number of the testimony as it ought to appear shall be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. I intended—my colleague on the committee and myself have conferred in reference to it—to make the motion mentioned by the Senator from Kansas. I do not desire to discuss the proposition at all; in fact I am not in a condition to do it; but having examined rather cursorily this testimony I find several instances, or at least two, in which very important testimony, if true, is left in the volume, though it was ordered to be stricken out. I therefore make the motion that the document as printed thus far be suppressed, and that the Senate order a reprint of the testimony as taken by the committee, with the exception that the testimony ordered to be stricken out be left out of the record. I make that motion and ask leave to enter it now.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will say to the Senator from Illinois that the testimony perhaps could be corrected by restitching the volume as now printed, leaving out the parts objected to, without the trouble and delay of reprinting the whole testimony.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well; any way so that it is out. Suppress that portion of it and the object is accomplished.

Mr. SAULSBURY. With the understanding that there shall be no unnecessary delay, let that be done. The testimony now in the volume may be unstitched and the sheets objected to can be omitted from the testimony, and so far as the committee is concerned, that is so far as I have had an opportunity to consult the committee, there is not the slightest objection in the world to that course.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well; so far as that is concerned I will say to the chairman that the only object of reprinting is merely to get out of the record this testimony that is now improperly in the record. If the Printer can use the same document, extracting from it this improper testimony and then restitching the volume, of course I have no objection to that. The only object is to get the volume correct, and I make that motion; and if the motion prevails, then such course as the chairman of the committee may suggest to the Public Printer in regard to it can be taken so as to comply with this order, and it will be perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator will modify his motion—

Mr. LOGAN. I was just about to change the motion, and if the Senator will allow me I will do so. I make the motion now that the record be so changed as to leave out the evidence which was ordered by the committee to be stricken from the record.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LOGAN. I mean all evidence improperly in the record.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I do not suppose there is a member of the committee or of the Senate who would think of taking the slightest advantage of the appearance of this testimony in this record. It would be contemptible. I do not suppose there is any member of the Senate who is not perfectly willing to get rid of it. My own judgment is that the statement in the body of the report that the testimony was stricken out by the unanimous vote of the committee, and then the errata added, stating also that it was stricken out, do get rid of it. That is my judgment. But I will say to the Senator from Illinois that I think, if he wants the thing gotten rid of, not only legally but actually and does not want these pages there, the suggestion of the Senator from Delaware is a great deal the best one, because if we order this whole record reprinted, which I think wholly unnecessary, these old reports will still be here. Senators talk about posterity looking into it and the country looking into it. If so, they might find these old records. The best plan I think, if anything is to be done, is to order that these same printed volumes be taken and these omitted pages be taken out.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator would have listened to the motion as I corrected it he would have seen that I corrected it so as to meet the suggestion of the Senator from Delaware so that it might be done either way—

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I think that is the best way if it is done at all.

Mr. LOGAN. That is a matter for the Public Printer. I will state my object. It is very well for us to say the Senate will not be governed by this testimony improperly in the record; but we know how easy it is to read it if it is in the record. I will not say that Senators do not always read a volume like this; but I will say that it is a pretty hard piece of labor, and sometimes persons are so busily engaged that they do not do so, and a Senator would be as likely to make a mistake in argument by reading the improper testimony as he would be apt to read the testimony correctly as it is found in the record. By reading it it would go into the RECORD and become a part of the RECORD, and the fact would not be known by persons who read it ordinarily that it was excluded, as evidence, but it would be taken by them to be proper testimony in the case. Hence, I desire that it be excluded entirely so that it cannot by any possibility get into the RECORD as proper testimony to go before the country. That was the object I had in the motion.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I do not think that the evil apprehended by the Senator from Illinois could occur in any event. We do not ordinarily have printed or written speeches; the speeches here are delivered; and any Senator undertaking to use this testimony on this floor would be corrected at once. He would be corrected by the volume. I will say that while I think there is nothing in this matter one way or the other, I have never really regarded the testimony of Weber as amounting to much anyway. It is not referred to in the slightest degree in the report of the committee.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand that.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. It never has been referred to anywhere; but I think to gratify these gentlemen that perhaps, if it can be done, while I think it unnecessary—

Mr. LOGAN. Allow me to say to the Senator that it is not "to gratify these gentlemen." It is a matter of right that we ask, and not of gratification.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Well, the Senator will excuse me.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly, but I do not wish—

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I should think a thing that was right would gratify the Senator.

Mr. LOGAN. It ought to gratify everybody; but the Senator says "to gratify these gentlemen." It ought to gratify the whole Senate to do right.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not desire to be put in the attitude to which the Senator would assign me.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I see no objection to the motion if this can be done without delay; and I think it can.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well; let it be done.

Mr. GARLAND. The motion is that the testimony be corrected. I do not know exactly how the Senate can do that, because the testimony comes in a certain shape to the Senate from the committee. The chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections would not have any power to correct this record, and any agreement he might make with the Public Printer would not have any authority to take anything out of this record or put anything in it, or change it in any respect. It seems to be agreed by the members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections that there are mistakes here. The only way I can see, in a parliamentary manner, to get rid of this matter is to recommit this testimony to the committee, that they may examine it, with the witnesses if they see proper, and make the necessary corrections, and then report it back to the Senate. Individuals cannot correct this, nor can the Public Printer, nor can the Senate correct it now.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The Senator from Arkansas will allow me. The only portion alleged to be incorrect is the including of the testimony of E. L. Weber and two affidavits in the record which were ordered by the committee to be stricken out, and do so appear in the volume.

Mr. GARLAND. They appear in the testimony reported by the committee, and the only way I can see to get rid of them is first to recommit the volume of testimony to the committee and let them examine it formally and make their report to the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas, since hearing his suggestion, that I believe that would be the proper way to do it.

Mr. GARLAND. There is no other way to do it.

Mr. LOGAN. I will accept that suggestion as an amendment to my motion, to recommit this testimony to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for corrections and return so that it may be corrected, and then have it printed and submitted to the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas is very sensible and is the only way to dispose of this matter. The cost of correcting the report will be very trifling indeed; if the type is standing it will only require repaging and running over the pages; if it is not standing it would have to be reprinted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] moves that the testimony taken in the Kellogg-Spofford case be re-committed to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for the purpose of revising its publication. Is that the proposition of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. INGALLS. This motion should be supplemented by another in order to obtain fully the results that the Senate desires to reach. I have just obtained from the document-room a statement as to the disposition that is made of Senate documents. They are sent as follows: to

Document-room of the House.....	411
Office of the Clerk of the House.....	30
Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate.....	243
Office of the Secretary of the Senate.....	6
Folding-room of the Senate.....	190
State Department.....	25
Secretary of the Treasury.....	1
Secretary of War.....	1
Ordinance Office.....	1
Public Printer.....	4
File-copies.....	10
Reserved for binding.....	988
Total number printed.....	1,900

These copies should all be withdrawn. The Superintendent of the Document-Room informs me that this defective copy has been sent to the document-room and distributed in accordance with this plan; and in order to reach what the Senate desires this whole edition should be withdrawn and suppressed.

Mr. LOGAN. I suppose that by recommitting it to the committee we recommit the whole testimony.

Mr. INGALLS. These copies have been delivered to the Department of State and the other Departments.

Mr. LOGAN. I will afterward make a supplementary motion. The motion I submit now is that the testimony be recommitted to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with the direction that the committee suppress that portion of the testimony which was excluded by the committee from its record.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois that the motion should be that the copies of the document already distributed be withdrawn.

Mr. LOGAN. I suppose that referring it back to the committee is withdrawing it from the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. But they have already been distributed to the State Department, to the document-room, and to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LOGAN. There is a motion on that point which I will make after this is acted upon.

Mr. ANTHONY. All right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion as first stated by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SAULSBURY. What is the motion?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is that the evidence taken in the Kellogg-Spofford case be recommitted to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for the purpose of revising the publication.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. Now I move that the Senate direct that this evidence as already printed be withdrawn from distribution, so that when it is corrected the corrected copies shall be distributed in lieu of those that are improperly printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois further moves that the report of the evidence taken in this case, so far as possible, be withdrawn and suppressed.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I submit that before the Senator from Illinois makes that motion the committee itself now having the matter referred to it had better take such steps as it deems best to secure a sufficient number of copies, because if the Senate by order withdraws these I do not see that the committee would have any control over them. We may reach the conclusion that the testimony which is objected to ought to be omitted. Of course, if we do that we shall seek to ascertain whether we can come into possession of a sufficient number of copies to answer the order of the Senate for the publication, some 1,200, I think; but if the Senate now orders these to be suppressed, what control shall we have over them? We shall then be driven to the necessity of republishing the whole testimony.

Mr. ANTHONY. The motion of the Senator from Illinois is not that they be suppressed, but that they be withdrawn. I do not see how the Committee on Privileges and Elections would have any authority over these documents.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the purpose is that they shall not be distributed, I have no objection. If the object is to place them beyond the control of the committee so that we may not have them corrected and drive us to publishing the testimony over again entirely, I think it would occasion a greater delay than we ought to be subjected to.

Mr. ANTHONY. If withdrawn, of course they will be handed to the Government Printer, and he will either correct them or reprint them as he finds necessary.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If that is the understanding, I shall not object.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. That is the understanding.

Mr. LOGAN. That is the object certainly, to prevent the matter being distributed, so that correct copies may be furnished.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. If the object is simply to give them to the Government Printer to make this correction, it is very proper.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 237) directing the Secretary of the Navy to organize a board to inquire into the present condition of the double-turreted monitors, and the propriety and cost of completing said vessels.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 3035) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4214) to amend and re-enact sections 2552 and 2553 of the Revised Statutes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. R. No. 237) directing the Secretary of the Navy to organize a board to inquire into the present condition of the double-turreted monitors, and the propriety and cost of completing said vessels; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION OF 1883.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate proceeds to the consideration of the Calendar of General Orders.

The bill (S. No. 1160) to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the treaty of peace and the recognition of American Independence by holding an international exhibition of arts, manufactures, and the products of the soil and mine, in the city of New York, in the State of New York, in the year 1883, was announced as being first in order; and its consideration was resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on an amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] in section 9, after the word "each," to insert "which shall be paid in at the time of subscription."

Mr. KERNAN. Having had the benefit of a conference with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] who suggested a substitute for this amendment, and with their approbation, I offer the following amendment in place of those already submitted:

In line 4, section 9, after the word "each," strike out "and to" and insert:

And each subscriber shall pay not less than 10 per cent. of his subscription at the time he subscribes; and said commission shall.

So as to make the clause read:

That the said commission shall have authority and is hereby empowered to receive subscriptions of capital stock to an amount not exceeding $12,000,000, to be divided into shares of $10 each, and each subscriber shall pay not less than 10 per cent. of his subscription at the time he subscribes; and said commission shall issue to the subscribers of the stock certificates therefor, &c.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York, [Mr. KERNAN.]

Mr. CARPENTER. Is there any provision in the bill for the payment of any money beyond the 10 per cent.?

Mr. KERNAN. I have deferred to the superior judgment of the Senator from Vermont. He thought, leaving it in this way, the balance would have to be paid when required by the corporation. He has prepared another section to be offered, which says they shall not do certain things till it is paid. He approved of this and thought it unwise to add what had been suggested by the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KERNAN. The Senator from Vermont thinks another clause important, and I assent to it. I offer the following amendment, prepared by him, as an additional section:

Not less than $1,000,000 shall be subscribed, and not less than 10 per cent. thereof shall be paid in before said corporation shall do any corporate act other than may be necessary to its organization; and no part of the capital stock or assets of said corporation shall be withdrawn, be refunded to, or divided among the stockholders or any of them, until all the debts and liabilities of said corporation shall be fully discharged.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall the bill be engrossed for a third reading?

Mr. CARPENTER. On that question, as I am very anxious to learn whether the Senate thinks we have any constitutional power to organize a celebration in the city of New York, I ask for the yeas and nays on the third reading of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, I dislike very much to vote against a bill which is calculated to benefit our friends in the city of New York, and probably to benefit the whole country by an exhibition; but I have never voted yet for any such corporation as is proposed to be created by this act. I find no warrant whatever for such a proceeding in the Constitution. I know that when the bill creating a somewhat similar corporation in the State of Pennsylvania was on its passage, in 1872, and the clause of the Constitution was inquired for under which the bill was about to pass, the authority was not found at all in the Constitution but in the Declaration of Independence, and when Senators expressed some qualms of conscience about the authority granted by that sacred instrument to pass an incorporation act, we were told that none of us would be held accountable for it because it would not happen again for a hundred years.

Now, it is not quite eight years afterward that we are asked to follow that dangerous and bad precedent. All the provisions which seem to be incorporated in this bill were incorporated in that bill creating the centennial commission of finance, or board of finance, as I believe it was called. All the guard, all the protection that it was possible to throw around the bill in the interest of the United States Treasury was put there; but the eagle of the United States was spread over the exhibition; it was called "under the auspices of the United States." The United States invited foreign nations to come to our shores with their exhibits, and the United States stood as godfather for the exhibition. What was the result? In the January or February of 1876, according to my recollection, we were appealed to to appropriate, I think, $2,000,000, but with our usual mode of bargaining we cut it down to a million and a half, and we were induced to appropriate a million and a half of dollars to carry out that proposition for a world's exhibition; and the argument that was made on this floor not so much openly, not so much by speech, but that argument which is whispered in the ear was, "The credit of the United States is at stake; we have invited foreign nations to come to Philadelphia to witness our great exhibition; it will fail unless we have help; we must be aided; you must give us this million and a half to carry on the exhibition which was originally contemplated as a State affair."

Mr. WINDOM. I should like to ask the Senator if every dollar was not paid back?

Mr. WHYTE. I was going to say that. Of course; but did we not have to get it back by a lawsuit? Did we ever get it back until the Supreme Court of the United States decided that we were entitled to it?

Mr. WINDOM. It only proves that we made the law so that we could recover, and we lost no money by it.

Mr. WHYTE. I was just going to say that we hedged it in. We did loan it, we meant to loan it, and Congress hedged that loan in by such language and such apt words that when it came to stand the test of judicial inquiry the Supreme Court decided that it was not a gift but a loan, and required that the corporators, before they distributed the assets of their corporation, should pay back into the Treasury of the United States this million and a half of dollars which they claimed had been a gift. We maintained that it was a loan. They intended it to be a gift when they asked for it. They intended it to be a donation when they asked for it. Congress changed the form of the act which the executive committee of that association had framed, according to my recollection. Congress changed it so as to make it a loan, so that the United States could recoup out of the assets of the corporation the money which had been loaned.

We were told then that it was only once in a hundred years. Now they come with a new exhibition for New York within eight years of that time. We are not to be committed to it, it is said. Why, what did that exhibition at Philadelphia cost us in absolute appropriation exclusive of the million and a half of dollars? What did Congress appropriate for the exhibits, for that part of the work in which the United States was an actor? Congress appropriated in all I think $650,000. More than half a million of dollars we contributed eight years ago for an exhibition at Philadelphia, which was to last one hundred years.

Mr. President, I cannot vote for this bill. I would be glad to see the exhibition; I would be glad to see the gathering thousands as for a month I saw them in Philadelphia in 1876, glad to see them in New York, and I know they would be hospitably received; I know that they would be gracefully entertained by those large-hearted people. But with all my desire to do this, I can find no authority in the Constitution to vote for such a bill; and more than that, I do not think that in so short a time we should be called upon to appropriate another $650,000 for a similar exhibition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill be engrossed for a third reading? upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. COKE. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] are paired on this question. They are engaged in the room of the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Senator from Ohio, if present, would vote "nay," and the Senator from Iowa, "yea."

Mr. GARLAND. My colleague [Mr. WALKER] is detained at his rooms by sickness. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] is also detained by sickness.

Mr. WITHERS. My colleague [Mr. JOHNSTON] is detained from his seat by sickness in his family. He is paired on political questions with the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. TELLER.] I presume this is not a political question.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. VEST] has been called home on some important business; but on all political questions he is paired with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB.] This is not a political question, of course; and I do not know how he would vote.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 26, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—26.
Bailey,	Cameron of Wis.,	Kirkwood,	Ransom,
Baldwin,	Conkling,	McDonald,	Rollins,

EQUALIZATION OF HOMESTEADS.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, it will be remembered that yesterday morning, having in charge a bill that had precedence on the Calendar, I gave way to the bill which has just been concluded. The bill to which I refer is a short bill of great interest to my State, and it will not occupy five minutes to pass it, I am sure. It has been before considered in the Senate and amended in accordance with the view expressed by the Senate then, and it went over without prejudice. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask the indulgence of my good friend from Connecticut.

Mr. EATON. It gives me no pleasure to decline the request of my friend from Nebraska, but I have charge of a very important public bill, and I desire to get a vote on it to-day. It consumed yesterday, and I desire to get a vote on it to-day, and therefore I feel that I ought not to give way. I hope my friend will pardon me.

Mr. PADDOCK. I assure the Senator that if this bill occupies more than five minutes I will assent that it shall be set aside.

Mr. EATON. I will give five minutes. I am very good-natured.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask for the consideration of Senate bill No. 1085. There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 1085) to equalize homesteads, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands, with amendments. The first amendment was, in line 6, after the word "entered," to strike out the words "or may hereafter enter."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 12, after the word "select," to strike out the word "others."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 15, after the word "of," to insert the words "crops or;" so as to read:

But he shall not be entitled to a patent therefor without satisfactory proof to the General Land Office of the planting and continuous cultivation of crops or forest or fruit trees on an area of the same equal to one acre for each forty acres thereof during a period of three years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert at the end of the bill:

And all assignments and transfers of the right hereby secured, and all contracts to assign or transfer such right made prior to the issue of the patent, shall be null and void: And provided further, That any person who has entered less than one hundred and sixty acres may, if he so elect, surrender his original entry to the United States for cancellation, and thereupon be entitled to enter lands under the homestead laws the same as if the surrendered entry had not been made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator from Nebraska if this is a claim for the cultivation of fruit trees simply under the forest-culture law?

Mr. PADDOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is it an extension of the provisions of that law?

Mr. PADDOCK. No, sir; it is a limitation.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I wish to offer an amendment that I think my colleague will accept. In line 13, after the word "where," I move to insert "within the State or Territory in which his or her homestead is located," so that the selection shall be confined to the State or Territory within which the person has his homestead.

Mr. PADDOCK. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is the bill (H. R. No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I ask the consent of the Senate to take up Senate bill No. 1319, which was up once before.

Mr. EATON. I cannot give way further; I must insist on the regular order.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I do not think it will occupy three minutes' time.

Mr. EATON. I desire to pass this deficiency bill to-day, if possible.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. If my bill occupies three minutes, I will not press it.

Mr. EATON. I must stop at some time, and I cannot give way further.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The deficiency appropriation bill is the unfinished business.

Mr. BLAINE. What arrangement has been made in regard to the Geneva award bill?

Mr. McDONALD. I understand that the appropriation bill is the unfinished business before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. McDONALD. I want it understood that the Geneva award bill does not lose its place, but that when this bill is finished we go back to that.

Mr. BLAINE. Do I understand the Senator from Indiana to say that the Geneva award bill is postponed until after a long political debate on this appropriation bill?

Mr. McDONALD. I do not know anything about the political debate on this bill, but I understand it is the unfinished business of the Senate.

Mr. BLAINE. Only because by an arrangement yesterday the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DAVIS,] who had the floor on the Geneva award bill, declined to proceed, and it was understood that this was taken up informally, he having the floor and being entitled to it on the Geneva award bill.

Mr. McDONALD. I was not present yesterday when the understanding spoken of by the Senator from Maine was had.

Mr. EATON. There was not any understanding of that sort, to my knowledge.

Mr. McDONALD. I heard the Chair announce this appropriation bill to be the unfinished business, and I understood it to stand in that way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Geneva award bill was laid aside by formal vote of the Senate.

Mr. BLAINE. By formal vote?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. By formal vote of the Senate yesterday. The question was distinctly put on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut that it be laid aside.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Informally.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The word "informally" did not accompany it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And could not.

Mr. BLAINE. Do I understand the Chair to say that the motion was formally put, that an "aye" vote and a "no" vote was called for on a motion that the Geneva award bill be laid aside?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays were not called for.

Mr. BLAINE. I did not say that; but was there an aye-and-no vote as we answer viva voce?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut asked unanimous consent that this deficiency bill should be taken up, to which objection was made. He then made the formal motion that the Geneva award bill be laid aside. The Chair submitted that question to the Senate and it was carried and this bill taken up, and it was under consideration when the Senate adjourned yesterday.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I am a little too hoarse to talk at all to-day. I am ready, but I am too hoarse to-day to speak.

Mr. BLAINE. Yesterday the honorable Senator from Illinois had the floor; and my understanding was—

Mr. EATON. If the Senator from Maine will give way a moment, I think I can set the matter entirely right. The Chair of course is right that I made the motion. I then myself said that I would give way to the Senator from Illinois if he desired to speak yesterday. He did not care to speak, and therefore I asked the Senate to go on with the deficiency bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal states the fact as it occurred and as the Chair has stated it.

Mr. EATON. If the Senator from Maine has nothing further to submit, let us go on with the bill.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to state that so far as a hasty reading of the RECORD goes, it does not sustain what the honorable President has stated was the action of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator from Maine will look at the bottom of the second column on page 7 of to-day's RECORD he will find a colloquy between the Senator from Connecticut and the Vice-President which shows that the then pending bill was postponed by common agreement of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal will be read, if there be any dispute about the fact.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The RECORD shows it at the foot of page 7, as the Senator from Kansas has said:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois is entitled to the floor on the Geneva award bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I will give way to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. EATON. I call for the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first question is on postponing the pending bill.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut to take up House bill No. 4924.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Such was the fact.

Mr. BLAINE. But the agreement was made that the Senator from Illinois should step aside temporarily and the deficiency bill might go on. All I desire to say is that I wish the Geneva award bill could be reported from a committee that would ask the action of the Senate upon it.

Mr. McDONALD. The chairman of that committee is not able to be in his seat to-day on account of illness, and if he was here I apprehend he would not insist on continuing the Geneva award bill to the displacement of an appropriation bill which is regularly pending. I want so far as I am concerned to do whatever may be necessary and right and proper to advance the Geneva award bill; and I am justified in saying that as soon as this appropriation bill is disposed of I expect to call for the consideration of the Geneva award bill and continue it until it is acted on by the Senate.

Mr. HEREFORD. The Senator from Maine does the Senator from Ohio very great injustice.

Mr. BLAINE. I am not speaking of the Senator from Ohio at all. Mr. HEREFORD. He is chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, and has urged the consideration of the Geneva award bill continually but is not now able to be here. The Senator from Maine says he hopes it could be reported from a committee that would urge it. The gentleman who has charge of it has urged it.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I am ready to speak on the subject, but I am hoarse to-day.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senate was quite willing to hear the honorable Senator yesterday.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I could have talked yesterday better than I can to-day.

Mr. EATON. I hope we shall get through with the appropriation bill to-day so that we may go on with the Geneva award bill to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. House bill No. 4924 is before the Senate. DEFICIENCIES IN APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

Mr. EATON. I will state to the Senate that I have received a communication from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, desiring a little more than we gave him yesterday, and I will read a few words of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Read the whole of it.

Mr. EATON. I will if it is desired. It is a letter addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury and sent by the Secretary to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. It is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, March 30, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor of calling your attention to the fact that there will be a deficiency in the appropriation for "dies, paper, and stamps," Bureau of Internal Revenue, for the current fiscal year of $51,283.10.

This deficiency is occasioned by the extraordinary increase in the collections of internal revenue. During the period from July 1, 1879, to March 1, 1880, there were issued 54,848,241 internal-revenue stamps for tobacco, snuff, cigars, beer, spirits, &c., in excess of the number issued during the same period in the last fiscal year, and the cost of printing alone has been $33,217.94 in excess of the cost during the same period of last year.

The amount actually audited and paid for eight months has been $296,693.10. Taking these expenditures as a basis for the expenditures of the next four months, the following amounts will be required:

For the Bureau of Engraving and Printing	$97,000 00
American Bank Note Company, for printing	16,000 00
John J. Crook, for printing tin-foil wrappers	1,200 00
For paper	11,000 00
Expense of receiving, handling, and counting paper	5,400 00
Freight	600 00

These items, with those already audited and paid as above stated, make a total of	427,893 10
The amount of the appropriation	$375,000 00
And amounts reimbursed to credit of same	1,610 00
	376,610 00

Leaving a deficiency of

51,283 10
This deficiency results necessarily from the fact that during the past eight months the receipts of internal revenue have been $5,944,956.46 in excess of the receipts for the same period of the last fiscal year.

I respectfully request that these facts be laid before the honorable Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, with the request that this deficiency be put in as an amendment to the immediate deficiency bill now being considered by the Senate.

Very respectfully,

GREEN B. RAUM,
Commissioner.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Secretary of the Treasury.

I have submitted this matter to all the members of the Committee on Appropriations I could find, and we all agree that this addition ought to be made, and therefore I have prepared this amendment, to be added after line 22, page 2, as a new paragraph:

For dies, paper, and stamps, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1880, $51,283.10.

I desire it to be placed on the bill now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will receive the amendment at this time.

Mr. BECK. After consultation with the Senator from Connecticut, who has charge of this bill, I agreed that this deficiency ought to be made part of the bill—although, perhaps, it might have been withheld until the regular deficiency bill; it is very evident that it will be needed—or we shall have complaints made that we are cutting down the amount necessary for the public service.

I rose for the purpose of saying that the estimate of this Department for all the items for which they are now asking a deficiency, according to my recollection, was $410,000. We had given $375,000, and the deficiency now required is about $20,000 more than the estimate of the Department for all the service to which it pertains.

We have been treated first in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury and then in subsequent communications to all sorts of cautions and remonstrances against extravagant appropriations, and we have been told by the Secretary (no doubt he thought he was impressing on the country how economical he was) that if there were any excess of appropriations over the estimates it would be the fault of the Congress of the United States; and no doubt whenever we do exceed the estimates a dollar, although we are compelled to do it in a variety of ways, the gentlemen who take the same view as the Secretary and agree with him in politics will from one end of the country to the other this summer be arraigning the democratic party because of the extravagance of both Houses under its control; and yet, in the face of these facts, we are told the public service will suffer unless we furnish this money in excess of estimates and that the revenues from internal taxation will suffer unless it is done, and we are thus placed in the dilemma either in the face of the facts to vote the money required or cripple the public service.

I desire also to say that the statement made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the letter just read has falsified a great many of his predictions, and a great many of the apprehensions of gentlemen on the other side, in regard to the effect of the reduction of taxation. We were told by the Commissioner in his report last year, and page after page was devoted to the enforcement of his gloomy predictions, that if we reduced the tax on tobacco from twenty-four to sixteen cents, as it was proposed and as we did, we should lose one-third of the revenue. His language was:

I therefore express the unqualified opinion that a reduction of the tax one-third will inevitably result in a corresponding reduction of the revenue derived from that source.

Nine or ten million dollars was to be taken away, and we were threatened with being responsible for creating a deficit in necessary revenues. The sinking fund, we were told, could not be provided for; nothing could be done which the public faith was pledged to maintain if we dared to reduce taxation. What is the result? Although all the internal revenue with the exception of a few million dollars comes from tobacco and distilled and fermented spirits, notwithstanding we have reduced the tax from twenty-four to sixteen cents on tobacco, the falling off on tobacco has been less than three millions on any calculation the Department can make, and the Tobacco Leaf and other publications indicate even that much will not be lost. And they give us the assurance that the revenue from tobacco is going up beyond what it was at twenty-four cents in a very few years; even now the Commissioner, instead of having to report any of the frightful results he had anticipated, says:

This deficiency results necessarily from the fact that during the past eight months the receipts of internal revenue have been $5,944,956.46 in excess of the receipts for the same period of the last fiscal year.

When he was drawing twenty-four cents on tobacco.

Mr. DAWES. Perhaps the Senator made the statement, but I did not catch it. Did he make the comparison on tobacco?

Mr. BECK. No, sir. I say that all the taxes received from internal revenue, with the exception of a few million on proprietary stamps and bank checks, come from tobacco, whisky, and fermented spirits, and that, instead of the reduction on tobacco coming short nine and one half millions, as the Commissioner said it would, it has really lost less than three millions with the rapid increase that is going on. Owing to the fact that restrictions have been removed it will be up in a year or two at sixteen cents to what it was at twenty-four, and the total aggregate of the three this year is nearly six millions for eight months above what it was last year.

Mr. DAWES. I was not inquiring as to the total aggregate. I was inquiring as to how much on the item of tobacco had been the increase or decrease the Senator was speaking of.

Mr. BECK. I have looked at the Tobacco Leaf, a paper published by the tobacco interest, which as I recollect makes it smaller than I stated; but the loss will be less than three millions, instead of nine or twelve millions.

Mr. DAWES. During the whole year?

Mr. BECK. For the whole year. I will endeavor on some future occasion to set forth the exact facts. I thought I had the paper at my desk, but I have not.

Mr. DAWES. I inquired simply to get the facts from the Senator.

Mr. BECK. I will give the exact facts to the Senator when I have them; but at this moment I cannot lay my hand on them, and therefore may not be accurate. I desire to say that it illustrates the fact that whenever you have taxation so high as to be far above the revenue point frauds come in and great embarrassments of trade follow; just as they existed in the tobacco trade at a twenty-four-cent tax; and when you put taxation down to something like the revenue point your revenues always increase, business increases, and the production increases and prospers, so that the revenue does not diminish anything like in proportion to the reduction of the tax. The statement of the Commissioner that he is nearly six millions in advance for eight months of this year over last year grows largely out of the fact that the Commissioner is relieving as far as he can—because I believe the Commissioner is administering his office well (and that is one reason why I am willing to give this deficiency now to him)—all trade and business from which he is obtaining his revenue in every possible way that he can consistent with the protection of the Government; he has suppressed very many illicit distilleries and has established very many distilleries in places where there were none else than illicit distilleries, all of which are now paying him more or less revenue. In other words, he is getting the business in hand, because he is no longer treating the men engaged in it as though they were robbers and thieves, but is endeavoring to give them a chance to live. He is no longer taking advantage of the little technicalities that no man in the business can live up to, but is endeavoring to make men prosperous in their business, so that the Government itself may be prosperous in the receipt of its revenues. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] says it is so in his State. I know it is so almost everywhere. The large increase of stamps that he is selling and the large increase that is required, because he has to appoint more storekeepers and more gaugers, and is converting what was formerly an illegitimate business into a legitimate one, and men are prospering under it and the Government is prospering under it, make me willing to give him the money necessary to carry on the business of his Department, although it does exceed the estimate made by the Department by some $20,000, and although the Secretary has taken occasion to scold us every time he has a chance for daring to go above his estimate; yet the increase of revenue, the increase of business, and the necessity for more work in the Internal Revenue Department, growing, as I say, out of the business being prosperous, first, by the reduction of taxation in one branch of it, and, second, by better administration in the other, make it, to my mind, a very proper thing to do. I will not embarrass a Department which is bringing in large revenue and which is treating the men who are carrying it on reasonably well. None of us complain of fair taxation on spirits and tobacco which enter into consumption; we ask only for fair treatment, liberal administration, and the removal of annoying and oppressive restrictions, and we will sustain the Commissioner in all his efforts to collect his revenues and run his Department free from annoyance or embarrassment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ROLLINS in the chair.) The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. EATON.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations in order.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations is, after line 127, to insert:

For continuing the work of adjusting and settling the claims of the several States, under the act of Congress approved September 28, 1850, and the acts supplemental thereto and amendatory thereof, for swamp lands, including all claims for swamp-land indemnity, under the acts of March 2, 1855, and March 3, 1857, and other acts, $6,000.

Mr. EATON. Only a word in regard to that amendment. My attention was called to the subject by my friend, the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL,] and another gentleman, and I thought it important that the amendment should be made and should be appended to the bill. It was impossible for me to find a majority of the committee in order to submit it to them, and, therefore, on my own responsibility I added this amendment, for I will not claim that it was joined in by the committee. I assumed the responsibility of doing it; and if there is anything wrong about it, it can be stricken out at once. My friend from Missouri, who has a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, will give full information in regard to the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I read for the information of the Senate a letter from the Department of the Interior addressed to me:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., March 30, 1880.

SIR: Referring to your letter of this date relative to an appropriation "for continuing the work of examining and adjusting claims for swamp lands and swamp-land indemnity," I have the honor to advise you as follows:

By the act approved June 23, 1879, (Laws of the Forty-sixth Congress, first session, chapter 45, page 40,) an appropriation of $15,000 was made for this purpose. As soon as practicable after the passage of said act agents were appointed to investigate claims for swamp-land indemnity in the States of Florida, Illinois, and Missouri—those States having the largest claims of that character before this office—under the act of March 2, 1855, (10 Stats., page 634,) and the act of March 3, 1857, (11 Stats., page 251,) extending the same. Under the regulations prescribed by the Department these agents are required to make a personal examination in the field of each forty-acre tract for which indemnity is claimed, besides attending the taking of testimony touching the character of said tracts on the part of the State. This work is necessarily expensive, as each agent, in addition to his incidental expenses of board and lodging, must be furnished with transportation to the tracts to be examined, which are scattered over a large area of country in each State, and, although the strictest economy in expenditures has been insisted upon and observed by each agent, the appropriation is so nearly exhausted that they must all be recalled by the middle of next month unless a further appropriation is made. Partial reports from said agents show that about one hundred and seventy-five thousand acres have been examined in the field and testimony taken on a large amount of the tracts thus examined. Some of this testimony has been forwarded to this office, and, judging from the results of the work so far, the amount saved to the Government will largely exceed the amount of the appropriation. The withdrawal of the agents before they have completed their labors will not only interrupt the work of adjusting these claims, now being rapidly proceeded with, but it will involve considerable expense to the Government, as well as the several States in which the authorities have arranged to present testimony in support of their claims. In view of all the facts I earnestly recommend that an appropriation sufficient to continue the work without interruption to the close of the current fiscal year be made.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. A. WILLIAMSON,
Commissioner.

Hon. F. M. COCKRELL,
United States Senate.

I hope that will be satisfactory to the Senate. It is recommended in the estimates of appropriations and also in the annual report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from Missouri in relation to this matter. As I understand it, these swamp lands were all donated to the States; and now there is a claim pending that these lands have not in all cases held out full measurement, and the States come back upon us for damages in consequence of the short measure. Is that the fact or not?

Mr. COCKRELL. I would thank the Senator to state the source of his information on that point. It is marvelously strange to me that such information should be presented to the Senate. My friend from Vermont will pardon me for saying so. There is nothing of the kind at all. The States are not making any claim for damages—nothing of the kind.

The Government granted to the States the swamp lands within their respective limits. Questions were raised as to the selection of those lands and the mode of selection. The States in many instances had the lands surveyed and made a claim that certain specific lands were swamp and overflowed lands under the law. The General Government looked at the general surveys of the public lands made, and where those general surveys on their face happened to be definitely and accurately made, with an accurate description of the character and quality of the lands, and showed the lands to be swamp and overflowed, the General Government patented those lands to the States; but where there was any doubt about it the General Government declined to patent them.

Now a controversy has arisen between the States and the General Government as to the character of particular lands. The General Government has refused to patent them to the States until she can send an agent to the ground and examine it and take testimony on it, and on page 545 of the Report of the Secretary of the Interior, the rules and regulations and mode of taking the evidence will be found. That is one of the modes of adjustment of claims for title to these lands. In many cases the States have sold these lands; persons have inclosed a part of them; in some instances homes have been erected upon them; and the title has still been retained in the General Government. The States are anxious to have the matter settled; the General Government is anxious to have it settled. The General Government has it in its own hands, and asks an appropriation to send agents to investigate and report upon the character of the lands, and this is a part of the work of those agents.

A word in regard to the swamp-land indemnity, as it is called. The States claimed that certain lands were swamp lands. Since the date of the grant of Congress to the States the General Government has sold through the respective land offices quite a large number of these tracts of land. Congress passed a law providing that where it afterward turned out that the lands so sold by the General Government were actually swamp and overflowed lands and ought to have been patented to the States, then the General Government should refund to the States the amount of money received by the Government for those lands. That is the swamp-land indemnity claim, nothing more, nothing less—the claim made by the State for the purchase-money received by the General Government for those lands which were actually swamp and overflowed at the time, but which have since been sold by the General Government and patented to individuals. To prevent controversy the States have agreed to accept, under the law of Congress passed for that purpose, the purchase-money, the indemnity, instead of asserting title to the land under the swamp-land grant.

My friend from Vermont is doubtless aware that the Supreme Court has decided that that passed the title to the States; it operated as a grant. To avoid all these troubles this law was passed, and the Secretary of the Interior, under an appropriation of $15,000 made at the last Congress, has sent agents into the field; they have been examining in various countries, have been reporting; they are reporting against issuing patents for a large number of tracts of land; they are reporting in favor of issuing patents to some; they are reporting in favor of allowing the States in some cases the purchase-money for certain lands where they are perfectly satisfied that they were swamp and overflowed, and where they were not they report against it. Thus we are rapidly having the whole matter adjusted. These agents are in the field. This $6,000 will keep them to the close of the year, will save thousands of dollars in expense to the General Government and to the respective States, and it is no claim for damages or anything of the kind.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Permit me to add to the very full statement made by the Senator from Missouri, that the Secretary of the Interior in some cases has disputed the selections which were made by State officers under the act of 1852, claiming that lands that were reported as swamp lands were not so in fact, and with a view of determining that question agents have been sent to some of the States in order that patents might not issue from the Government for lands that did not fall clearly within the provisions of the swamp-land act of 1852. In a great many instances the States proceeded and made the selections in accordance with the act of 1852 through their own agents and co-operating I think with the surveyor-general of the United States in the State; but when they came up here in many cases I know that objections were made that these selections included lands that were not really swamp lands, and before patents could be issued to the States the Secretary of the Interior said, "I must have this matter determined," so that commissions went to travel over the ground to see whether they were swamp lands or not, and this is part of that business.

Mr. MORRILL. I think I am now confirmed in the information I had, by the Senator from Missouri himself. The very language of the amendment is to provide indemnity to States for swamp lands. Now, Mr. President, according to the statement of the Senator from Missouri we are called upon to pay the States for lands that have really been sold and settled upon by settlers heretofore as part and parcel of the public lands, because they were really swamp lands. I do not propose to argue this question. I suppose the amendment will prevail, being reported, as I understand it to be, by the Committee on Appropriations; but certainly I cannot see from the statement of the Senator from Missouri himself that it is anything else than making an indemnity to States for lands that have fallen short of the land that the States supposed to have been their due.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, there is scarcely any one subject of legislation in the appropriation bills that the State of Arkansas is more interested in than this one particular feature. The only complaint I think against the pending proposition is that the amount is not sufficient by any means for completing, or, as expressed in the provision, "for continuing," the work of adjusting and settling the claims of the several States.

The swamp-land act of the 25th of September, 1850, used the language that certain lands "are hereby granted." Very early in the steps to secure lands under that grant the question arose in the several States what that grant meant, whether it was a grant in presenti or whether it was one that had to be perfected thereafter by some other act on the part of the person or the State making application under it. The State courts held with wonderful unanimity that it was a grant in presenti; that all the lands swamp and overflowed within the meaning of that act passed at once on the passage of the act to the States; that it was only after that a matter of identification to establish just what lands were swamp and overflowed.

There were several acts passed afterward amendatory and explanatory of the original act; but after all, if the State courts were right that it was a grant in presenti, it was beyond the reach of Congress to change it. Congress could no more revoke the gift after it had been completed than an individual could. It was not given for any consideration at all, but simply as an absolute donation.

The question never came fairly before the Supreme Court of the United States until about ninth Wallace in a railroad case from Iowa. After considerable discussion of that case Judge Miller, delivering the opinion of the court, followed the track that had been pursued by the State courts, and held that this grant was a grant absolutely, by its own terms, in presenti, nothing remaining afterward to do but to identify the particular lands, just as if a man should give a deed for so many black horses that he had; the only question would be to bring up a horse and show that it was his originally and that it was black.

In perfecting this gift questions of fact arose as to whether particular lands were swamp and overflowed, questions arose upon subsequent acts, the act of March, 1857, for example; so that the titles became complicated in the different States that had received the swamp lands under the original act. The Department in a measure could do nothing. Some claimed the lands under previous claims, some under the swamp-land grant, and many of the best lands in the State of Arkansas, for example, and I suppose in other States where the grant operates, are absolutely tied up, held up, the title now in abeyance, for the want, as this part of the bill says, of adjusting and settling these various disputes.

The State of Arkansas heretofore sent her agent especially for this business, and she has had bills introduced in both Houses of Congress heretofore to settle this matter upon her part. The Senator from Florida has stated the different disputes that have come up, so that the Senate can understand and comprehend just exactly what this provision is intended to accomplish. We desire to have the gift perfected.

The small sum of $6,000 is put in here. I am frank to say that it is not sufficient to complete this work; but if it is deemed so by the Senator from Missouri, who has gone to the Department to make the inquiry, of course I shall be satisfied with it. It is an important matter, I say, to those Senators whose States are not affected by this grant and who have not had occasion to look into the different laws upon this subject, to determine whom these lands belong to, whether they are of the character that come under the original grant of swamp and overflowed lands or whether they are not. In the mean time many railroad grants in the State of Arkansas have been laid upon some of these lands that are known to be swamp and overflowed, by grants made since the act of 1850 was passed. It is necessarily bound to give rise to a great deal of litigation hereafter; but as far as the General Government can do it, it is its duty to go forward and finish this matter of adjusting and settling these disputes, so that the Government can say who, so far as it is concerned, owns this land, whether it is the land of an individual who has an original entry outside of the swamp-land grant, or whether it is the land of the State under the swamp-land grant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations after line 127.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the Money Order Office, Post-Office Department, in line 140, after "from" to strike out "the passage of this act" and insert "April 1, 1880;" and in line 142, after "eighty," to strike out "a sufficient sum is hereby appropriated" and insert "inclusive, $2,325;" so as to make the clause read:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Money-Order Office:

For seven additional clerks for service in the Money Order Office, namely, two of class 4, one of class 3, one of class 2, and three at $900 per annum, from April 1, 1880, until June 30, 1880, inclusive, $2,325.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert after line 144:

Office of the Postmaster-General:

For the preparation and publication of post-route maps, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 166, in the appropriations for the State Department, to increase the item "for extra clerk-hire and copying" from $2,000 to $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 172, after "exceeding," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of State to purchase the manuscript of the revised Consular Regulations prepared by A. B. Wood, Chief of the Consular Bureau in the Department of State, and approved by the Secretary of State, for such sum, not exceeding $3,000, as shall seem to him a fair price for the work; and to use for the payment of such purchase the appropriation already made by the act of Congress of January 27, 1879, for the expenses of editing and revising the Consular Regulations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 177, to insert:

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

National Museum:

For steam-heating apparatus and fuel for the new National Museum building, $30,000.

For water and gas fixtures and electrical apparatus for the new National Museum building, $10,000.

Mr. EATON. This is a very large increase over the appropriations made by the other House, and therefore I feel that it is proper that I should make a very brief explanation of it.

Professor Baird came before us and satisfied your committee that it would be a very great saving of expense to the Government if the steam-heating apparatus, the water and gas fixtures and electrical apparatus can be put into the new Museum building between this time and the 1st of July. The building cannot be finished until that is done. They have arrived at a point in the construction of the building when it becomes necessary to add these features to it. Therefore the committee were unanimously of the opinion that this appropriation ought to be made. I will read a letter from Professor Baird:

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION,
Washington, D. C., March 10, 1880.

SIR: I would respectfully ask the Appropriation Committee of the Senate to insert in the special deficiency bill whenever it may come before the committee certain items herewith inclosed in reference to the National Museum, now included in the estimates of the next fiscal year. The appropriation made by Congress of $250,000 for the building itself will be sufficient to complete it. The heating apparatus, however, the plumbing, and the electrical arrangements will necessarily require a separate appropriation.

The building is now nearly completed and will probably be out of the contractor's hands by the 1st of June. It will greatly facilitate its prompt occupation if the appropriation asked for can be made.

Very respectfully,

SPENCER F. BAIRD.

Hon. H. G. DAVIS,

Chairman Appropriation Committee, United States Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 184, to insert:

SENATE.

To pay George A. Clarke for services as messenger in charge of the Official Reporter's room of the Senate from July 1, 1879, to June 30, 1880, inclusive, $1,200.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does that mean, and why has not this gentleman been paid out of the regular appropriations, as everybody else has, if he has been employed?

Mr. EATON. All I can say to my friend from Vermont in regard to the matter is that this messenger, who is in the employ of our very estimable Official Reporter, has been at work and has not been paid one dollar during this fiscal year.

Mr. CONKLING. What messenger is it?

Mr. EATON. It is Mr. Murphy's regular messenger, and he is not on the roll. He has not been paid up to this time. The work has been done; he is a faithful officer. The letter of Mr. Murphy explaining the case fully is in the hands of the committee. He ought to be paid.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That I have not the slightest reason to doubt; I was only endeavoring to call the attention of the Senator to the point of how it happens that the administration of the Senate is carried on in such a way that a faithful and meritorious employé cannot get his pay through the proper officers in the regular way. That is the thing that puzzles me. There is no doubt about the propriety of paying this man.

Mr. EATON. I suppose it is because the present Sergeant-at-Arms does not do his business in the same manner that past Sergeants-at-Arms have done theirs.

Mr. CONKLING. Before the war?

Mr. EATON. I have not said that yet, nor have I said when. That belongs to my friend from New York and not to me. The present Sergeant-at-Arms has not been able to put this man on the roll. He has done the labor and we think he ought to receive pay.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "necessary," in line 220, to strike out the words "of the unexpended balance of any appropriations heretofore made for the support of the southern claims commission," and in line 222 to strike out "reappropriated" and insert "appropriated;" so as to read:

Southern claims commission:

That the sum of $800, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be transferred from the appropriation for contingent expenses of the southern claims commission, made under act of June 21, 1879, (see Statutes, volume 21, page 29,) to be available for paying the salaries and traveling expenses of the agents of said commission. And the sum of $1,200, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the payment of a clerk, who may be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, at the rate of $100 per month, to complete the records of the said commission and care for the same under the supervision of the Treasury Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 239, to strike out the words:

Judge of the circuit court of the United States for the district in which such marshals are to perform their duties, or by the district judge in the absence of the circuit judge.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Circuit court of the United States for the district in which such marshals are to perform their duties; but should there be no session of the circuit courts in the States or districts where such marshals are to be appointed, then and in that case the district judges are hereby authorized to convene their courts for the aforesaid purpose.

So as to make the clause read:

For special deputy marshals of elections, the sum of $7,600: Provided, That hereafter special deputy marshals of elections, for performing any duties in reference to any election, shall receive the sum of $5 per day in full for their compensation; and that all appointments of such special deputy marshals shall be made by the circuit court of the United States for the district in which such marshals are to perform their duties; but should there be no session of the circuit courts in the States or districts where such marshals are to be appointed, then and in that case the district judges are hereby authorized to convene their courts for the aforesaid purpose; said special deputies to be appointed in equal numbers from the different political parties. And the persons so appointed shall be persons of good moral character, and shall be well-known residents of the voting precinct in which their duties are to be performed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I just ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BOOTH, (when his name was called.) On all political questions I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. BAILEY.]

Mr. BURNSIDE, (when his name was called.) On all political questions I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MCPHERSON.] If he were here, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. EDMUNDS, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] who is detained from the Senate by illness, I am sorry to say. If he were present he would, as I understand, vote in favor of the amendment; I should vote against it.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado, (when his name was called.) On all political questions I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. WALKER.]

Mr. TELLER, (when his name was called.) I am paired on all political subjects with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.]

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. INGALLS. My colleague [Mr. PLUMB] is paired on all political questions with the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. VEST.] Both Senators are unavoidably absent from the Senate.

Mr. DAWES. My colleague, [Mr. HOAR,] who is necessarily absent, is paired with some gentleman on the other side; I think with one of the Senators from Delaware. I should not like to put it on record that he is paired with the Senator from Delaware, but he is paired with some one on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. FARLEY. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. SHARON] is paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. GROVER.] If the Senator from Nevada were here, he would vote "nay," and the Senator from Oregon would vote "yea."

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] is absent in company with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] engaged in official duties pertaining to the Senate. If the Senator from Wisconsin were here, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Bayard,	Farley,	Jones of Florida,	Slater,
Beck,	Garland,	Kernan,	Vance,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 252, to insert:

For repairs to the court-house building in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, $800, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EATON. I believe all the amendments that were suggested by the Committee on Appropriations have been adopted by the Senate. I understand that my friend from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask that the communication which I send to the desk be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

BOTANIC GARDEN,
Washington, D. C., March 29, 1880.

SIR: I respectfully ask your attention to the necessity of a very small appropriation being put in the deficiency bill for this fiscal year for the Botanic Garden. The sum of $500 for extra labor, to gather, put up seed, and print labels for the same was put in the legislative bill of the first session of this Congress, but for some unexplained reason it did not become a law. The benefits of the institution, by the distribution of seed and plants, are only limited by the want of the cheapest kind of labor. Four more men at $1.25 per day is an absolute necessity to keep the grounds in decent order, and to make the usual distribution of plants they should be employed at once for the months of April, May, and June. Their pay ($1.25 per day) would amount to $350.

I therefore request that the sum of $850 be put in the deficiency bill for extra labor and printing labels for Botanic Garden.

Respectfully submitted.

WILLIAM R. SMITH,
Superintendent Botanic Garden.

Hon. D. W. VOORHEES,
Chairman Joint Library Committee.

Mr. VOORHEES. I offer an amendment, and ask that it be inserted after line 227, under the head of "miscellaneous." After line 227 I move to add:

For extra labor on the grounds, putting up seed, and printing labels, for the Botanic Garden, $850.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should like to have an explanation—

Mr. VOORHEES. The letter explains the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I listened to the letter. I should like to have an explanation why $850 deficiency occurs in the Botanic Garden. In proportion to the amount spent there, that is a very large deficiency. The first I knew of the amendment was from hearing the letter read. I have no doubt the Senator from Indiana can give a proper explanation of it. Something in the letter was said about $500 being appropriated in the legislative bill that the superintendent did not get the use of. If that be so—

Mr. VOORHEES. Let me explain. The item did not pass; it was inserted in the bill at one stage of the proceedings, but it did not become an appropriation, and that is the way the greater part of this deficiency occurs.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have heard something of a deficiency there. I suggest to the Senator from Indiana that four or five hundred dollars ought to be sufficient. I should not object to four or five hundred dollars, but I feel it my duty to object to anything exceeding that amount.

Mr. VOORHEES. I can only say that I have very great faith in Mr. Smith's judgment upon this question. He is a very economical Scotchman, and I do not believe he would ask for fifty cents beyond what he conscientiously believed was needed there to keep the grounds in order. With great respect to the Senator from West Virginia, I will take the sense of the Senate upon the amendment as I have offered it. I prefer to do so. It is recommended by Mr. Smith in his official capacity, and I have such perfect confidence in not only his integrity but his good sense upon these subjects that I prefer to let the amendment stand appropriating $850.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I have no objection whatever to the adoption of the amendment; but as a member of the body I am anxious that the administration of its rules in matters of this kind should be uniform. There is a rule of the Senate which requires, as I understand, that all amendments which go to increase an appropriation bill shall be recommended by a standing committee of the Senate or by the head of one of the Executive Departments. I wish to know whether Mr. Smith is the head of an Executive Department? I remember that a year ago this question came up in the Senate, and because the head of one of the Executive Departments had suggested an increase of an appropriation in a letter addressed to a Senator, so strict was the rule that in that case the Chair held very rigorously against me that because it was not addressed to the Senate the amendment was not in order, and it was held by the Senate to be out of order.

While I will go as far as anybody in sustaining Mr. Smith in anything that he may recommend for his branch of the public service, and I have every confidence in his integrity and in his usefulness, still I think it is important that the rules should be observed. Under the rules, I think it is necessary that the Committee on Appropriations should recommend this increase.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I do not understand the Senator from Florida to raise the point of order. Certainly his point of order would be well taken if he made it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not understand the Senator from Florida to make any point of order.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Nor do I make one now. This amendment was not before the Committee on Appropriations, although the rule requires it to go there. I do not propose to raise the point of order on it, however. I only rose again to suggest to my friend from Indiana whether he had not better make it the amount that it was intended to have passed last year in the legislative bill, $500. I should probably vote for $500, but I cannot vote for $850. I think it excessive, I think it unnecessary, and I hope the Senate will not agree to give $850.

Mr. CARPENTER. Does the Senator raise a point of order?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have not done so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 230, I move to strike out the words "the general," before "deputies," and insert "their;" so as to read:

For the payment of the fees and expenses of United States marshals and their deputies, earned during the fiscal year ending June 30, A. D. 1880, $600,000.

Mr. EATON. I want to say but one word. I do not know that my friend from Iowa will explain his amendment. Certainly the Senate will not adopt it if they intend to uphold the amendment they have just adopted for special deputies. Therefore I trust that the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like the Senator from Connecticut to point out to me the clause of the statute providing for general deputies.

Mr. EATON. I am not pointing out clauses of the statute at all.

Mr. ALLISON. So I infer. I know of no clause in the statutes providing for general deputy marshals. Therefore I think the words had better not appear in the bill. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] who is absent by illness, as I stated before. I would vote in favor of this amendment; he would vote against it.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. WALKER] on all political questions.

Mr. TELLER, (when his name was called.) On all political questions I am paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.] If I were not paired I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BOOTH, (after having voted in the affirmative.) I desire to withdraw my vote; I voted inadvertently. I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. BAILEY.]

Mr. BURNSIDE, (after having voted in the affirmative.) I voted inadvertently. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MCPHERSON.] If he were here, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. CARPENTER. I wish to say that my colleague [Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin] is absent on business of the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Allison,	Carpenter,	Kellogg,	Platt,
Baldwin,	Conkling,	Kirkwood,	Rollins,
Blaine,	Dawes,	Logan,	Saunders,
Blair,	Ferry,	McMillan,	Windom.
Cameron of Pa.,	Hamlin,	Morrill,

NAYS—31.

Bayard,	Farley,	Kernan,	Slater,
Beck,	Garland,	Lamar,	Vance,
Butler,	Gordon,	McDonald,	Voorhees,
Call,	Groome,	Maxey,	Wallace,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Morgan,	Whyte,
Coke,	Hereford,	Pendleton,	Williams,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hill of Georgia,	Pryor,	Withers.
Eaton,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,

ABSENT—26.

Anthony,	Edmunds,	Jonas,	Sharon,
Bailey,	Grover,	Jones of Nevada,	Teller,
Booth,	Hampton,	MCPHERSON,	Thurman,
Bruce,	Hill of Colorado,	Paddock,	Vest,
Burnside,	Hoar,	Plumb,	Walker.
Cameron of Wis.,	Ingalls,	Randolph,
Davis of Illinois,	Johnston,	Saulsbury,

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. BLAINE. I should like to move an amendment, one that I presume will require unanimous consent. I will submit it to the judgment of the Senate. It is to the clause on the first page of the bill where an appropriation of $300,000 is made for the public printing. Ever since the Government Printing Office was established the employes of that office of all kinds have received until the current year the same consideration in respect of holidays that all the other employes of the Government have had. Under some new construction made by the superintendent of public printing or some necessity that forced the construction, I do not know which, perhaps a shortness of money, they have been deprived of that privilege. The Printing Committee of the House, if I may refer to it—I believe it is a joint committee still—have reported a joint resolution which I ask to have read by the Secretary, and which I move as an amendment.

Mr. EATON. I shall have to object to the amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. Hear it read.

Mr. EATON. I have no objection if my friend really desires to have it read; but the Committees on Printing of both Houses have this matter now under consideration for the purpose of arriving at a conclusion, if possible, to be put in a general bill hereafter. We did not think it best to put it in this deficiency bill.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator will object?

Mr. EATON. I shall.

Mr. BLAINE. Let it be read any way. I suggested that I thought it might require unanimous consent. The words which I offer as an amendment are really now in the form of a joint resolution that has been reported in the House from the Committee on Printing, which committee itself is a joint committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 11, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to add:

Provided, That the employes of the Government Printing Office shall be allowed the following legal holidays with pay, to wit: The 1st day of January, the 22d day of February, the 4th day of July, the 25th day of December, and such day as may be designated by the President of the United States as a day of public fast or thanksgiving, and other public holidays: Provided, That the said employes shall be paid for these holidays only when the employes of the other Government Departments shall be so paid: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall authorize any additional payment to such employes as receive annual salaries. And this provision shall be in force and take effect from and after the 31st day of December, 1879.

Mr. BLAINE. This provision needs the change of wording that I inserted there, "and other public holidays" after "thanksgiving," because Decoration Day was not included. The amendment does not increase the appropriation. In its express language it puts the employes of the Printing Office on exactly the same basis with the employes of all other Departments and bureaus and Government employment of every kind in this District.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My friend from Connecticut has charge of the bill and will have something to say, but I wish to ask the Senator from Maine whether he is in favor of legislation upon an appropriation bill? I am opposed to it upon principle, but I want to ask the Senator if he is in favor of legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. BLAINE. My friend's principle will very soon have a test. Is he opposed to the legislation on this bill which comes from the House? Do I understand my friend from West Virginia that he will oppose the legislation at the end of this bill?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. What the House did is one thing, and what the Senate is doing is another thing.

Mr. BLAINE. Then my friend's principle breaks down; he is only opposed to that kind of legislation on appropriation bills which some Senator may think right, but not to that which some member of the House may think right.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senate and House are two bodies. We cannot control the House, but a majority here can control the Senate.

Mr. BLAINE. I hardly think my friend from West Virginia would like to stand on as narrow an edge as that, that if the House sends us a piece of legislation it is all right for us to vote on it as proposed, but if a Senator shall propose to add a little, then he must object to it as a matter of principle.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I did not say it was all right to vote upon whatever the House may put in. I have asked the Senator a question. I see he wants to dodge it, and does not mean to answer it.

Mr. BLAINE. Not at all; I have not the slightest disposition to dodge it. I shall defend my position in the way I have heretofore done. I should be glad to see a joint rule adopted which should absolutely prevent legislation upon appropriation bills in either House; but, as I had occasion to remark two years ago in the course of a lengthy discussion on this point, (and I shall not make this another lengthy one,) I conceive it to be in the highest degree detrimental to the independence of the Senate that it shall bind itself in no event to legislate on an appropriation bill, and be spoon-fed by the other House with whatever legislation it may choose to attach to an appropriation bill. As the rules of the House now stand they are so changed as to permit them to attach just what they please to appropriation bills. If the Senate will bind itself down never to propose anything, then I say the equality of legislative power of the two branches is destroyed, destroyed utterly.

If the House will say there shall be no independent legislation on appropriation bills, I shall join them. I made many efforts when I was a member of the House and occupied the position of its presiding officer to get a joint rule that should absolutely cut off legislation on appropriation bills. At that time the Senate was the body that used to send down to the House legislation upon appropriation bills, and send it down in whole volumes. Now the thing is changed, and the House sends it up to us. I think it wrong in both; but I think if one body indulges in it the other in self-defense must do it. In other words, the privilege or the surrender of privilege must be precisely equal in both cases.

This is a provision which my honorable friend from West Virginia would hardly class as a dangerous piece of legislation. It is a small bit of justice to be done to one of the hardest-worked and most deserving portions of the Government employes. It is simply to give them the benefit of the holidays that come from political and religious considerations. It is that Christmas and the Fourth of July they shall, in common with everybody else, enjoy without being docked for it. Nobody else is in the whole District. Why should they be? I appeal to the kind-heartedness of my friend not to interpose a discussion here upon the propriety of legislation upon appropriation bills to cut off this, I will not say generous, but this just provision.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is perfectly in the power of the Senate, adhering to its own rules against legislation on appropriation bills, (and it has such rules that are absolute and imperative,) to defend itself against legislation on appropriation bills that comes here from the House by simply striking out all such provisions. We have it entirely in our power to defend ourselves; and inasmuch as the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine is clearly and distinctly within the prohibition of the rules of the Senate and against what he himself considers to be the just principle that should apply to appropriation bills, I make the point of order entirely irrespective of the merit of the question, that this is proposing legislation upon an appropriation bill, and I object to it for that reason.

Mr. WHYTE. I am sorry that the Senator from Maine has introduced the amendment at this time—

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the Chair rule on the point of order.

Mr. GARLAND. It is to be decided without debate.

Mr. BLAINE. The Chair can reserve the point of order for a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will reserve the point of order.

Mr. CONKLING. Let us hear the rule read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is Rule 29.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the rule.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

29. No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill; nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto; and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate; and any amendment to a general appropriation bill may be laid on the table without prejudice to the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. This is not a general appropriation bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, it is a general appropriation bill, a general deficiency bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Vermont state the point of order?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will state my point of order. It is that this amendment falls distinctly within the first clause of Rule 29, (I say nothing about the other clauses at the present time,) because this is an amendment which proposes a general rule of law, or in other words general legislation, on a general appropriation bill. This is a general deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. BLAINE. Where does the Senator find it defined as a general appropriation bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I find it defined in the nature of the bill itself and in the constant practice of the Senate.

Mr. BLAINE. I submit that a deficiency bill is not a general appropriation bill within the very meaning of the words. A rule that is exclusively confined to a general appropriation bill, within the technical rules that the Senator from Vermont is so fond of applying, could not attach to a deficiency bill.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask the Senator from Vermont to waive the point of order a moment, that I may state to the Senator from Maine that this subject-matter is now before the Committees on Printing of the two Houses, and we are about to agree upon some action that will be satisfactory probably to the Public Printer and to the employés.

Mr. BLAINE. My amendment is just what the Committee on Printing has reported in the House.

Mr. WHYTE. But that was not reported by concert of action between the two committees. That is from the committee of the House acting separately from the committee of the Senate. There is a controversy between the Public Printer and his employés. We have had some consultation upon the subject, and I have no doubt we shall prepare a bill that will be agreeable to all parties.

Mr. CONKLING. Now let us hear the part of the rule read under which this debate proceeds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that this is not a general appropriation bill; and under the first clause of the rule he would not be inclined to rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CONKLING. That is debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. From the ruling of the Chair the Senator from Vermont appeals. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. PENDLETON. I should like to have the decision stated again, and the rule read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont makes the point of order that the amendment of the Senator from Maine is not in order under the first clause of the twenty-ninth rule. If the Senator from Vermont makes the point of order that the amendment is not in order under the entire rule the Chair will decide upon that point.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Vermont does not make that point of order at this present time; he makes it on the first clause of Rule 29, and on no other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair decides that this is not a general appropriation bill, and therefore under the first clause the amendment is in order.

Mr. EATON. Will the Chair be so kind as to have the entire rule read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will have the entire rule reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received, nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto; and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and decided without debate, and any amendment to a general appropriation bill may be laid on the table without prejudice to the bill.

Mr. CARPENTER. Is debate in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is in order.

Mr. CARPENTER. I am opposed to the decision of the Chair on the point of order, but as anything is in order after debate comes, I want to say that I entirely concur with my honorable friend from West Virginia. I am opposed in principle to any general legislation upon an appropriation bill. I shall stand by the head of the Appropriations Committee on all occasions in voting to clean all these bills of all general legislation. I have no doubt that in accordance with his settled convictions and his well-known firmness of purpose, before the bill goes beyond the power of the Senator to do so, he will move to amend by enforcing his principle upon that branch of general legislation which is found upon this bill in regard to elections. I desire to say now that I shall follow the lead of that Senator when he makes a motion in support of his principle. If he should forget to make it, and any other Senator should make it, I shall still vote in favor of the principle of the Senator from West Virginia to strike out the general legislation from this bill.

Mr. CONKLING, (in his seat.) Knowing that he will vote that way.

Mr. CARPENTER. Knowing that he will vote that way also if he happens to be in the Chamber, and is not paired or otherwise encumbered.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senators from New York and Wisconsin together have made a right good little speech; but let me say to the Senator from Wisconsin that it was his side of the House, that it was his friend from Vermont, who made the objection, and not the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. CARPENTER. I understood the Senator from West Virginia, however, to state his objection to this legislation as a matter of principle, because it was general legislation upon an appropriation bill, and I know too much of the Senator to suppose that his principles apply to only one side of the Chamber.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I do not know that the Senator from West Virginia made any other remark than simply to ask the question of the Senator from Maine, whether or not he was in favor of general legislation upon an appropriation bill, stating at the same time that I was opposed to this amendment upon principle, not upon the ground that is stated by the Senator from Wisconsin. The Senator from Wisconsin might have been out at the time, and therefore he got started wrong, and he talked so well that he has made a right pretty little speech out of what perhaps he did not understand himself, not having heard the whole debate on the question.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. CARPENTER. I may have misunderstood the Senator; I am subject to small mistakes; but I understood him to say that he was opposed to legislation upon a general appropriation bill, on principle. I should now like to know how he does stand on that question, as I desire in all questions on appropriation bills to follow the lead of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if I can.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Upon that question I do not propose to be catechised just now. When the subject presents itself, when something tangible is here, something that the Senate ought to decide, and a Senator is required to state where he stands, then I shall do it without hesitation.

The question before us now is, whether the amendment is in order. I understand the Chair to have decided that this is not a general appropriation bill, and upon that ground, and that ground alone, the decision rests. Am I right in my assumption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. This bill contains appropriations for probably thirty different subjects; I have not counted them, but certainly there are twenty or thirty. If that number of appropriations for different subjects, going from one department to another, from the executive to the legislative, and for almost every Executive Department in the Government, up to the number of thirty, does not make the bill a general appropriation bill, then I hardly know what is a general appropriation bill. The Chair of course rules in accordance with his own belief, and it is only his opinion, or perhaps I should not question the decision of the Chair. If the Senator will look at the bill he will find that it commences with public printing; the next items are for the Treasury Department, for which there are several items, such as transportation of coin, and the service of the mints; then follows the Life-Saving Service, then public buildings, the Coast Survey, the War Department, the Navy Department, the Interior Department. All these are appropriated for in this bill. The legislative department is provided for, the Smithsonian Institute, the Fish Commission, the House of Representatives, the flower-garden, as some one suggests by the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, and the Department of Justice. It appears to be pretty general and pretty sweeping, perhaps more so than appropriation bills usually are.

With all respect to the decision of the Chair, it appears to me to be an appropriation bill in the sense in which the rule applies. Not wishing to consume time, I hope that the decision of the Senate will be that this is a general appropriation bill, because if we are to cut off this kind of a bill from the operations of the rule I hardly know when we shall get a general appropriation bill to which to apply the rule.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I have arrived at the same conclusion with the Senator from West Virginia, but not entirely by the same process of reasoning. I have no doubt in the world in my mind that this is a general appropriation bill within the meaning of the rule, and I shall therefore with reluctance have to vote against sustaining the decision of the Chair. As I understand the rule to be, it is that on all bills relating to the appropriation of public money for public purposes no increase of such appropriations can be made by amendment unless such amendment is sustained by the recommendation of the head of a Department or of one of the standing committees of this body. The reason of the rule is to guard against hasty legislation and an unnecessary appropriation of public moneys for public purposes. Surely this bill is open to all the objection on that point that any appropriation bill could be open to. If a bill comes here making a special appropriation for any individual purpose, for a private claim, for things disconnected with the Government, of course that is not a general appropriation bill within the meaning of the rule.

Mr. CARPENTER. This bill could not have originated in the Senate.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It is suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin that a bill like this could not have originated in the Senate. On that point I express no opinion; but if such be the case, it shows clearly that this is of that character of appropriation bills which come within the meaning of the rule.

Mr. BLAINE. I think an appropriation bill may originate in the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will say to my friend from Maine that the habit has been for many years that all such bills have originated in the other end of the Capitol and have been sent over here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Of course the Chair will understand that my appeal is not from any want of respect to the Chair or his decision, but is in order that the Chair shall determine authoritatively what has been determined, in round numbers, a thousand times before, that a deficiency bill falls within the provisions of Rule 28 and Rule 29. If this is a general appropriation bill, all amendments to it "moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation * * * or to add new items * * * shall at least one day before they are offered be referred to the Committee on Appropriations." In the fourteen years that I have been in the Senate that part of the rule has been applied to all deficiency bills uniformly and without question, and any amendment moved by direction, &c., as provided in that rule to a deficiency bill could not be received unless referred as there provided.

The first clause of the next rule is that "no amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill." That clause of the rule has been applied to deficiency bills uniformly when any point has been made, and always in respect of the nature of the deficiency bill for the fourteen years that I have been in this body.

The rule in relation to laying amendments to general appropriation bills upon the table without affecting the bill, has been uniformly and universally applied to deficiency bills.

Now, what is the nature of this bill itself? It makes a general provision to supply what is wanted in the general and prospective appropriation bills for the same kind of service, nothing else. We have what I suppose the Chair would agree to be a general appropriation bill that provides for the service of the Government for the next fiscal year. That bill passes. It is found that in many respects a provision made in it is inadequate. Then the House, according to the practice, (not according to the Constitution necessarily, but according to the practice,) originates an additional bill, a supplement to the former bill, which provides for making up what the former bill had omitted to provide for; and that comes here; so that if the original appropriations to which this bill refers were in general appropriation bills then this, as it appears to be, must necessarily be so; and such I say, to the best of my recollection, has been the constant practice and understanding of the Senate, and I think without any difference of opinion until this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont will allow the Chair—

Mr. BLAINE. One moment just. The Senator from Vermont is now arguing that the same principles of amendment should be applied to this as to a general appropriation bill. His first position was that it was a general appropriation bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And that is my position now, as I stated distinctly.

Mr. BLAINE. Then the Senator reaffirms that. What are the general appropriation bills must have that character in the Senate and House. You cannot consider that to be a general appropriation bill in the Senate which is not so considered in the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How do you make that out?

Mr. BLAINE. Because by custom, (not as the Senator from Wisconsin intimated by constitutional right,) they must originate in the House. By custom the general appropriation bills do originate there, and they must have exactly the character here that they have in the House. You cannot call a bill by a different name or give it a different character if it originates in the House, when it reaches the Senate. The House defines with perfect precision that "the general appropriation bills" shall be the following: "for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses; for sundry civil expenses; for consular and diplomatic expenses; for the Army; for the Navy; for the expenses of the Indian department; for the payment of invalid and other pensions; for the support of the Military Academy; for fortifications; and for the service of the Post-Office Department."

Mr. DAWES. And this is for deficiencies in those bills, and therefore of the same quality exactly.

Mr. BLAINE. Ah! That is another thing. Does the honorable Senator from Massachusetts say that an amendment to a bill is the same as the bill itself? That the mere fact of making it up afterward—

Mr. DAWES. Certainly; a proper amendment to a bill is of the same character as the bill itself, because it must be germane to it.

Mr. BLAINE. That is not the point we are discussing now. A deficiency is something that has grown up in despite of the rules. It has grown up under a necessity even against the rules. The rules frown upon deficiency bills; they are constructed to prevent them; they are regarded as evils. Possibly they are necessary evils, not to the extent in which we indulge them here; but the rules, I say, do not at all class them as general appropriation bills, and it would be a very unwise step so to class them. We ought not to legislate on the ground that necessarily, after all, we are going to have a great sweep-in and sweep-all called the deficiency bill elevated to the same rank and to be treated with the same dignity as an original appropriation bill. It ought to be discouraged rather than encouraged; and therefore the decision of the honorable president is, in my judgment, in strict accordance with the necessities of the case and with the universal parliamentary law.

Mr. DAWES. I understand a deficiency bill to be to make up of what was lacking in the original bills. The original bills did not go as far as was required of those bills and a deficiency in each one of those bills must of itself partake of precisely the same nature. If there be any reason in the world why independent legislation should not be attached to a general appropriation bill, that same reason, so far as I am able to see, must apply to an appropriation for a deficiency to make out and complete that bill.

If there be any reason in the world why it is not proper to attach general and specific legislation to one particular bill, when that bill has been passed and becomes a law, and it is found that it does not go as far as either the law or the necessities of the Government required, when we come to supply that deficiency in a new bill it is altogether a different thing, my friend from Maine says, and there is no reason in the world why we cannot apply independent legislation to that sort of a bill, while it is highly proper that by a joint rule we shall bind ourselves not to put independent legislation upon the original bill, but keep it for that part of the bill which completes and perfects it. I do not understand it, but I suppose it must be so. I never had any great knowledge of rules, especially those rules that do not have any index to them. That kind of rules I never could understand, and this is one of them. I cannot understand why, if it is improper to attach independent legislation to the whole of a thing, it is not improper to attach it to a part of the same thing. I hope my friend will make it perfectly clear, because he is always clear on the rules. I can always understand exactly what they mean after he has stated them; I never could find them anywhere else.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator has found some very extraordinary rules evolved out of his own imagination. In the first place, I never said that general legislation should go on appropriation bills, nor do I admit that the amendment I moved is general legislation. But it is very astonishing how some gentlemen can see general legislation in one thing and utterly be blinded to general legislation in another thing. Here is the Senator from Vermont, the famous fisherman. The bill as it comes from the House provides that "the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to place the vessels of the United States Fish Commission on the same footing with the Navy Department as those of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey"—a very large piece of independent legislation. It did not arrest the observation of the Senator from Vermont a particle; it does not come within the scope of his censure at all; but when a little bit of a provision is presented that gives to a poor printer a privilege which he has been deprived of by the rule of the superintendent of public printing, which in all the years that the Public Printing Office has existed has never before been denied to him, which restores the status, merely affirms what the law is, not making a new law, then the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Massachusetts find that that is a very large piece of independent legislation. Why did not my watchful friend from Massachusetts see the expense of the Navy Department increased by an independent act? Why did he keep his seat? Why did the Senator from Vermont, in connivance with it, permit that proposition to escape his watchful eye? Did his visions of salmon, his visions of a summer's vacation and the enjoyment of the rod and the fly, blind him to the fact that the vessels of the United States Fish Commission are hereafter, with his consent and his privity and his connivance in legislation, to be put upon the basis of the United States naval vessels and uniformed and commanded?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a vision of gammon that I had instead of salmon. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAINE. It is a vision of gammon that the Senator did not himself expose to the Senate.

In the first place, let me say that a deficiency bill has never been accounted a general appropriation bill. In the next place, if it were, the proposition which I have submitted is not at all obnoxious to the criticism that it is a piece of general legislation. I repeat, as I have heretofore repeated very often, and will continue to repeat, from some observation in both Houses, that a piece of general legislation which is out of order on an appropriation bill is a piece of general legislation to which the Senator objecting is opposed, whoever he may be. The piece of general legislation which is out of order on an appropriation bill is that particular piece to which the individual Senator speaking is opposed. That is the one.

Now, I do not at all ground my opposition—if I have it, and I have already recorded that I have it—to this political legislation on this bill simply or chiefly on the ground that it is on an appropriation bill. It is vicious in essence, it is vicious in intent, it is vicious in original design, and that design is no less vicious and that intent is no less mischievous whether it be in an independent bill or whether it be tagged upon an appropriation bill. And, as I said before to the Senator from Vermont in a prolonged discussion here, there is not a Senator of the United States who is on record for as large an amount of independent legislation upon appropriation bills as the honorable Senator from Vermont himself. I believe the honorable Senator from Vermont can challenge comparison with any Senator that ever sat in this Chamber for loading down the statutes of the United States with independent legislation on appropriation bills; and if I join him, or he joins me, or we join each other, in opposing the mischievous proposition at the end of this bill, I say you utterly fail to put the proper appreciation upon the intent of it if you ground your objection wholly or chiefly on the ground that it is a part of an appropriation bill. That is a petty objection. The objection to it is that it is wrong in itself; it is partisan in design, mischievous in intent, disastrous in its consequences, which we will argue when we come to it; and I shall spend very little time in the argument that it is attached to this bill or to that bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine is, as usual, immensely mistaken in imputing to me what he does about trying to legislate on appropriation bills under the rules as they stand now. He thought it fit on one former occasion, I believe, when something that he was very much for did not happen to meet the approval of the Senate, to say the same thing, as if the business of the Senate here was to try my consistency instead of to obey its own rules. I leave my good friend from Maine to spend all the time that he thinks is desirable in assailing me. It will not hurt the business of the country any; it will not hurt the Senate; and so far as it hurts me—as of course it will in a certain degree—I shall hail as one of those unseen blessings that come around in that form. I leave it there.

Now as to what he says about my not having opposed the provision about the fish-hatching steamer or whatever it is, let me just remind him of what perhaps he has not noticed, that that is a provision in the text of the bill as it comes from the House.

Mr. BLAINE. But the honorable Senator said—

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will be good enough to wait until I am through I shall be very much obliged to him.

Mr. BLAINE. I will wait.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is in the text of the bill as it came from the House. We are now on amendments. When the proper time comes, the sense of the Senate in respect of legislation as it is in the House bill upon this point will be taken, undoubtedly, and it will be open to me or anybody when the proper time comes to call attention to provisions in the House bill as it came to us that are of a legislative character and that ought not to be here. But until the time comes that such a question can be made, it is a little premature in my friend from Maine to take me to task as being inconsistent upon these matters.

In the next place perhaps he has forgotten also—for he forgets more in a day than I can remember in a week—he has perhaps forgotten also that the provisions in the House bill are not subject to any rule of the Senate. The rule does not say, as I think it ought to say, that every provision that comes to us in a House appropriation bill providing for a change in the laws should be stricken out as a matter of duty and without discussion except to ascertain that it falls within the rule. We have not any such rule. If therefore I make no point, because I cannot make any point under the rules, about this fish-hatching steamer, I am not obnoxious to the criticism of my friend from Maine.

But now the Senator from Maine chooses to aggravate or supplement the evil that he and I both agree exists about going into general legislative subjects on appropriation bills; because the House has done something that it ought not to have done, he thinks it is desirable that the Senate should do something that it ought not to do and which its rules provide it shall not do in the way of amendments proposed here.

Mr. BLAINE. But the honorable Senator, with that memory which calls up so much in a week, forgets in the course of half an hour that he laid down to us within that brief period that our duty was to oppose every piece of independent legislation which the House sent to us on an appropriation bill; and I pointed out to him right there before his eyes a piece of House legislation which the House sent to us and he sat here and assented to it. He never raised his voice.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not assented to anything yet.

Mr. BLAINE. That is critical and hypercritical and a little extra-hypercritical, the Senator will permit me to say. A man who sits still when a bill is read section by section and makes no motion to amend it is in the attitude of assenting to it. That is the rule and practice, and the honorable Senator from Vermont, who can make as fine a point as any man who lives, cannot make a point fine enough to cover that. He assented to that piece of legislation and entirely trod under foot when he did so the very rule he laid down for the government of the Senate, that it was the Senate's duty to sternly resist everything the House sent us on the ground that it was independent legislation. On the very first page of the bill that lies upon his desk that he stands here assenting to is a very important piece of general legislation which probably, if he had called attention to, he might have had stricken out.

But I do not desire to prolong the discussion. The question of the consistency of the honorable Senator from Vermont or of any other Senator is not of any very great consequence only that I desire when he airs his vocabulary on the rules and his rhetoric on the question just to remind him that, like all the rest of us, he is mortal, and that the memory which stretches so accurately for a week forgets what took place the year before last.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, the only question, as it occurs to me, involved in this appeal, as the objection is made on the first branch of Rule 29, is whether this is a general appropriation bill. The Chair has decided that it is not a general appropriation bill, and consequently that the objection is not well taken. Now, I propose to support the view of the Chair. In my judgment this is not a general appropriation bill.

The rules of both Houses, and certainly of the House of Representatives, from the formation of the Government down to this time, have dealt with appropriation bills, general and special. The general appropriation bills have been segregated, required to be reported within thirty days of the appointment of the Committee on Appropriations. They are designated, and are intended for the support of the Government in all those expenses required by law, by antecedent law. They are passed as appropriations to support the Government in accordance with the law as it exists at the time of their report to the House. Congress have by statute, which is incorporated in the Revised Statutes, provided for the style and title of a general appropriation bill distinctly:

SEC. 11. The style and title of all acts making appropriations for the support of Government shall be as follows: "An act making appropriations (here insert the object) for the year ending June 30, (here insert the calendar year)."

That is intended for the title of an appropriation bill, whether for the support of the consular and diplomatic service, or for the Treasury Department, or what not; that is the title of a general appropriation bill. When you come to a special appropriation bill, you use a different title; when you come to a deficiency bill you use a title entirely at variance with this title which belongs to general appropriation bills.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me to call his attention to Rules 27 and 28, which relate to general appropriation bills? I ask the Senator whether with his views on this question it would be competent to increase a bill of this description by an amendment, without referring it to a committee or having it supported by a recommendation from the head of a Department?

Mr. WHYTE. Beyond all question. When an amendment was offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] nobody raised a question. That did not come from any committee; that had not been offered and referred to the Committee on Appropriations in advance; and such things are done constantly upon deficiency bills without objection. It never would have occurred to me to make the objection.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My friend from Maryland will allow me to ask him whether he considers what is known as the general deficiency bill, which comes to us every year in regular order, is an appropriation bill or not?

Mr. WHYTE. Certainly it is an appropriation bill—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Maryland will suspend his remarks for a moment, the Chair will explain his position more fully. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is not in order under the rule taken as a whole, and if he had been allowed to proceed he would have so ruled at the outset, that the amendment is not in order under the twenty-ninth rule.

Mr. WHYTE. There is no difficulty upon that subject; but the Senator from Vermont limits the Chair, limits the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will allow the Chair a moment. The Chair on reflection does not consider himself limited to any clause of the rule, but he has a right to rule this amendment out of order under the general rules of the Senate, and he so rules.

Mr. WHYTE. The Chair has ruled it out of order, and from that an appeal has been taken.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, he ruled it in order under the first clause which was my point, and from that I appealed.

Mr. BLAINE. Then the Chair rules this out of order upon a point which nobody has yet made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules it out of order under the twenty-ninth rule.

Mr. BLAINE. But nobody has raised that point of order; and on what does the Chair predicate that decision?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order was made, and the Chair rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator from Vermont distinctly disclaimed making that point of order. He wanted to have the preliminary point under the twenty-eighth rule settled, and the Chair in my judgment very properly overruled that, and the Senator from Vermont disdained to have it ruled upon any other point than upon that point. Now the Chair comes to his relief by suggesting that it is out of order on another point which no Senator has raised, and therefore the decision upon this point is evaded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will allow the Chair to suggest that the entire rule was read to the Senate; and under the rule the Chair decides this amendment to be out of order.

Mr. BLAINE. But the Chair will excuse me for saying with all proper respect that a point of this kind must be raised before it shall become the habit of the Chair to rule upon it. The habit of the Chair is to allow the Senate to dispose of these things unless the judgment of the Chair is invoked.

Mr. FERRY. I ask the Senator from Maine if it is not the practice of the Chair to rule on questions that are submitted under the rules of the Senate without the point being made?

Mr. BLAINE. I submit not. I submit that when an amendment is offered to a bill it is not the habit in any parliamentary body—and the Senator from Michigan with his large experience in the chair will certainly justify me in saying it—for the Chair to raise a point of order of his own motion that that amendment is not in order.

Mr. FERRY. I can say that it is the duty of the Chair to rule under the rules of the Senate, and it has been the practice of the Senator from Michigan when occupying the chair to rule without a point being made by any Senator on the floor.

Mr. BLAINE. Then the Senator from Michigan stands as the solitary exception to all presiding officers I have ever had the pleasure of sitting under in my life, that an amendment is on the mere motion of the Chair said to be out of order before anybody in the whole House can make the point. If the honorable Senator is correct in what he says were his rulings, he takes off from the House the right to give unanimous consent.

Mr. FERRY. Mr. President, how often within the recollection of Senators is it the practice of the presiding officer, and almost universally so, when an amendment is offered, if the Chair conceives it not to be in order, to rule it out of order without the point being made. If the Chair makes the decision, then a Senator upon the floor can make the point that the decision is not in accordance with the rules; but the Chair always exercises the province of ruling under the rules on any question presented.

Mr. BLAINE. Without the point being made?

Mr. FERRY. Certainly, often.

Mr. BLAINE. I shall invite the honorable Senator from Michigan to with me observe the proceedings of the Senate any day or any week or any month, and I will convince him upon the records of the Senate where he has himself presided so ably, that his memory is sadly at fault.

Mr. FERRY. Frequently the presiding officer does not rule in a case when a Senator conceiving the assent of the presiding officer to be contrary to the rules makes the point of order; but it is almost universally the case that when amendments are offered the Chair rules them out of order or in order without the point being made. If any Senator feels himself aggrieved, and thinks the ruling is contrary to the rules of the Senate, he then makes the point of order, and then the Chair is compelled to rule upon it. I speak from my own experience, since the Senator has referred to me.

Mr. BLAINE. This is not a matter of great consequence. I only beg to differ entirely from my friend as to the habit, and to say that I think it would be regarded as a piece of very great impertinence for any presiding officer to sit in his chair and decide, without any Senator invoking the decision, right along upon the character of amendments. I think it would be a very extraordinary presiding officer that would do it.

I desire now before this thing passes off that the Chair shall distinctly state the ground upon which this amendment is ruled out of order.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES, of Florida. What has become of the appeal?

Mr. WITHERS. I should like to know what is before the Senate?

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair practically reversed its first ruling, and he supposed the appeal fell, by his ruling the amendment out of order under the twenty-ninth rule. Is the appeal withdrawn?

Mr. BLAINE. I simply desired to have the Chair state it, and if he puts it under a rule to have that rule read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The twenty-ninth rule.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, I am unwilling that a great question like this shall pass into the records of the country without my name being connected with it. [Laughter.]

I understand the present ruling of the Chair to be entirely sound. I do not understand that, when an amendment is offered, any Senator can insist that the Chair shall decide whether it is in order or not for a certain reason, or under a certain rule, or under a certain clause of a rule. That would be submitting a conundrum, and not raising a point of order. Any Senator may object to an amendment, as the Senator from Vermont did to this, upon the ground that it is out of order, and then he proceeded to state his point of order, which was that it was forbidden by the first clause of the rule which he read. That was his statement of his reason for making the point of order. The point of order, however, which the Chair must decide, is not whether it is out of order under one rule or another, but whether it is out of order or not. If the Chair is satisfied that under all the rules of the Senate, taken together and considered together, the amendment is out of order, he should rule so. No Senator can insist that the Chair should pass upon these mere conundrums: is this out of order on the first clause of this rule and then appeal from that; next, is it out of order on the second clause; and so on. The question is: Is it in order or not? On that question the Chair has to rule; and if it rules that it is not in order, the Chair is not bound to specify under what clause of the rules he rules it out. His decision on the question whether it is in order or not settles the only question that can be submitted to the Chair.

Mr. BLAINE. Now we have heard from two presiding officers of eminence who have graced the chair. The last one is that it is the duty of the Chair simply to say "that is out of order," and if a Senator respectfully asks what the reason is, or under what rule it is out of order, the Chair shall say, "It is none of your business; I say it is out of order." That is the way the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, under whose presidency I did not have the great pleasure of sitting and from which I luckily escaped, says the Chair should act. If what he now states as the duty of the Chair was his rule, I am very glad that my advent to the Senate was postponed until he had been relieved of those disagreeable duties which he says he performed with such absolute and reckless disregard of the common and ordinary rules of politeness. I am very glad that I escaped.

Mr. CARPENTER. I desire for once to concur with the Senator from Maine in expressing my satisfaction that he did not get into the Senate a moment earlier than he did. [Laughter.] The Senator from Maine is exceedingly fortunate in answering suggestions that have never been made. I made no statement as to what the Chair should do, or what reason it should give, or how insolent it should be. All that the Senator from Maine needed no instruction upon. He had presided where insolence was the rule. He is a master of it. I was not instructing him on that subject—

Mr. BLAINE. Oh, no!

Mr. CARPENTER. Nor offering him any suggestion about it. I did say, and I say now, that the only question a Senator can raise upon an amendment is whether or not it be in order, and that is the only point the Chair has to decide. The Chair may go into an opinion on the subject as lengthy as it pleases. It may refer to as many rules as it pleases sustaining its opinion. We all know the difference between the point in judgment in a case and the opinion delivered by the judge as the reason why he decides the case thus and so. So, if a Senator asked any presiding officer a civil question, any civil presiding officer would answer it civilly. I made no suggestion that it should not be done, that it could not be done, that it ought not to be done. Nothing of the kind. I was simply arguing one thing, and that was that the point in judgment when the Chair rules on a question of order is, is the amendment in order or not? How far the Chair should go in delivering an opinion in support of its judgment, giving the reasons why it is out of order, specifying the rules or clauses of the rules, is a matter in the first place left entirely to the discretion of the Chair. Then if a Senator wants any information on the subject, if he wants a pleasant conversation with the Chair, the Chair is supposed to be as pleasantly inclined as any Senator, and would probably give him the information. I was not speaking upon that subject, and the Senator from Maine went adrift on a question that was not suggested at all by me nor referred to by me in any way whatever. He was very successful in overcoming it. He never fails to ride down a hobby that he builds for himself for the purpose of attacking, and he was as successful in this case as I ever knew him to be.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator from Wisconsin now has elaborately told us exactly what he did not mean, but he forgot to tell us what he did mean.

Mr. CARPENTER. No; I did not forget to tell what I did mean.

Mr. BLAINE. Let us see. I asked of the Chair the simple question—and I certainly asked it from the highest of personal respect—under what rule this amendment was out of order, and I am very sure the honorable presiding officer will admit that I asked it in a respectful mode. I submit according to all the rules of decorum of which the Senator from Wisconsin is an acknowledged master, that it was for the Chair to determine whether he was treated disrespectfully, and the volunteer efforts of the Senator from Wisconsin were not needed; and if I was in that place where insolence is said by him to be the rule, I might gently intimate that his language bordered on the impertinent, but I am in the Senate and cannot say that.

Mr. CARPENTER. Since when could not the Senator say that? I have never known that Senator restrained by any rule from saying anything he wanted to say, and I certainly desire, as far as I am personally concerned, to release him now. He can say what he pleases. As far as I am concerned, he has my consent.

The Senator says that I stated what I did not think and I omitted to state what I did think. The Senator was drifting after another shadow then. I did state, and lest I may not be understood let me repeat, that when an amendment to a bill is offered and a Senator raises a point of order—what is his point? that that amendment under the rules of the Senate cannot go upon the bill; it makes no difference whether it is the twenty-fifth rule, or the twenty-sixth, or the twenty-seventh, or the twenty-ninth, that applies to it—the question is, is it in order under the rules of the Senate; and that is what the Chair rules on; and I say that a Senator cannot insist that the Chair shall rule upon a particular clause of a rule. The question and the only question the Chair is bound to decide is whether the amendment is in order or not; otherwise he is deciding conundrums, not questions.

Mr. DAWES. Suppose he gives a wrong reason for it, does that make it in order because he happens to give a wrong reason?

Mr. CARPENTER. No.

Mr. DAWES. So I supposed.

Mr. CARPENTER. What Lord Mansfield once told a friend of his who was appointed a judge to go to India is exactly in point here. He told him: "Decide the cases as you think is right, but never give a reason; your decisions will generally be right and your reasons generally wrong."

Mr. DAWES. I understood the Senator from Maine to say that when a point of order was raised and the presiding officer ruled upon it, if he gave a wrong reason for that ruling that made the proposition in order. I wanted to know how that was.

Mr. BLAINE. Well, the Senator from Massachusetts luckily can aid the Senator from Wisconsin. I do not wish to prolong this matter. I only wish before it passes from the Senate to submit to the honorable Senator from Wisconsin that probably he would have occasion to revise his opinions as to insolence if he had served in the House. I have had the privilege of serving in the House under different Speakers; I have had the honor to be Speaker myself; I could appeal to very many Senators on this floor who have served in the other House, in that body which the Senator says is ruled with insolence, and it would have outrun even his imagination of insolence for a Speaker to have said, "that is out of order, and if the member wishes to ask me why, I will refuse to answer the conundrum," I submit that that would have outrun all the insolence that the House ever was treated to, as it would destroy all the dignity the Senate ever laid claim to.

Mr. CARPENTER. I did not argue that question at all and have nothing to say about it now. I never was Speaker of the House; I am glad of that. I never was in the House; I am glad of that. So that branch of the argument I need not answer, neither confessing nor avoiding. I have said nothing about it and do not propose to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Do Senators desire to have the twenty-ninth rule read?

Mr. BLAINE. I do if the Senator from Wisconsin does not think it insolence to have it done.

Mr. CARPENTER. Especially I desire to have it read if the Senator from Maine thinks it is insolent.

Mr. McDONALD. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine has called for the reading of the twenty-ninth rule.

Mr. McDONALD. What question is pending before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the twenty-ninth rule is called for by the Senator from Maine. The Secretary will read it. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

23. No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill; nor shall any amendment nor germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto; and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate; and any amendment to a general appropriation bill may be laid on the table without prejudice to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on ordering the bill to a third reading.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to strike out of the bill from line 234 after the word "dollars" to and including line 252.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the words proposed to be stricken out by the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That hereafter special deputy marshals of elections, for performing any duties in reference to any election, shall receive the sum of $5 per day in full for their compensation; and that all appointments of such special deputy marshals shall be made by the circuit court of the United States for the district in which such marshals are to perform their duties; but should there be no session of the circuit courts in the States or districts where such marshals are to be appointed, then and in that case the district judges are hereby authorized to convene their courts for the aforesaid purpose; said special deputies to be appointed in equal numbers from the different political parties. And the persons so appointed shall be persons of good moral character, and shall be well-known residents of the voting precincts in which their duties are to be performed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNSIDE, (when his name was called.) On all political questions I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. McPHERSON.] If he were here, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea" on this amendment.

Mr. McDONALD, (when the name of Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, was called.) The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] is paired with the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.] The Senator from Illinois would vote "nay" on this motion if he were present.

Mr. EATON, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.]

Mr. EDMUNDS, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.] If he were present, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. HILL, of Colorado, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. WALKER.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. INGALLS, (when Mr. PLUMB's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. PLUMB] is unavoidably absent from the city. He is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] on all political questions.

Mr. TELLER, (when his name was called.) On this and on all political subjects I am paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.] If he were present, I should vote "yea" on this amendment.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired on this and all other questions connected with this bill with the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DAVIS.]

Mr. COCKRELL. My colleague [Mr. VEST] is paired on all political questions with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB.] If he were here, my colleague would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—22.

Anthony,	Cameron of Wis.,	Kellogg,	Platt,
Baldwin,	Carpenter,	Kirkwood,	Rollins,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on ordering the amendments to be engrossed and the bill to be read the third time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNSIDE, (when his name was called.) On all political questions I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. McPHERSON.] If he were here he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. EATON, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.] If he were here I should vote "yea."

Mr. EDMUNDS, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired, as I have stated before, with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.]

Mr. INGALLS, (when Mr. PLUMB's name was called.) I repeat the announcement before made that my colleague [Mr. PLUMB] is paired with the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. VEST.]

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DAVIS.] I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. COCKRELL. My colleague [Mr. VEST] if present, and not paired, would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 24; as follows:

So the amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill having had three several readings, the question is shall it pass?

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I said at the close of the morning hour to-day that it was my desire to obtain a vote on this bill to-day; but after consultation with friends on both sides of the Chamber, who assure me that we can get an early vote on the bill to-morrow, I have gladly consented that it may go over till to-morrow, and I will move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I hope my friend will withhold that motion for a few moments.

Mr. EATON. Certainly.

UTE INDIANS IN COLORADO.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, I am authorized by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report a substitute for the bill (S. No. 1509) to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado, for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same. I ask that it be printed, and I desire to renew the notice heretofore given that I will, as soon as the substitute is printed, endeavor to call up the bill for action.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask after that bill be printed that this substitute may be regarded as an original bill, so that amendment may be made to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed substitute will be printed; and the course suggested by the Senator from Iowa will be pursued if there be no objection.

NOTICES OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There are on the Calendar not strictly speaking appropriation bills, but three bills from the Appropriations Committee. One of them is known as the bill to repeal the permanent annual appropriations, which is an important bill to the country and it ought to get to the House before it is too late for action at this session; the second is the bill to adjust the Treasury accounts in regard to what are known as the unavailables; the third a bill to amend the sundry civil bill of last year in regard to the geological surveys. I wish to give notice now, not to interfere with the pending bill, that at as early a day as it is possible I will on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations ask that these three bills be taken up and proceeded with; they are on the Calendar; and if from any cause the Geneva award bill does not follow this bill, I will ask that these three bills be then taken up in the order I have named.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator does not ask any vote of the Senate at this time, but only gives notice.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I give notice of what I propose, so that the Senate may be prepared.

Mr. COKE. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that I have already given notice that I will call up Senate bill No. 1509 and ask for action upon it as soon as this deficiency appropriation bill is out of the way. There is no bill before the Senate that is more important and demands prompt action than it, as I think I shall be able to show whenever the time comes.

Mr. BAYARD. I hope it will be the pleasure of the Senate to allow me to call up a bill reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds making an appropriation for the base and pedestal of a monument to the late Rear-Admiral Samuel Francis Dupont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut made a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business, but withdrew it temporarily.

Mr. BAYARD. I think this bill will lead to no debate, and it is a thing that if it is to be accomplished at all should be accomplished now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest to the Senator from Delaware that I think we ought to have a short executive session. It is almost half past four o'clock now. The bill can wait until morning.

Mr. BAYARD. Then I will not interpose this bill.

Mr. EATON. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and forty-four minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 31, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. DAVID WILSON, D. D., Washington, District of Columbia.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

APACHE INDIANS, NEW MEXICO.

Mr. SCALES. I ask consent to report from the Committee on Indian Affairs, for consideration at this time, the bill (H. R. No. 5161) to amend an act entitled "An act for the removal of certain Indians in New Mexico," approved June 20, 1878.

Mr. BREWER. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso to the act approved June 20, 1878, making an appropriation for the removal of the band of Apaches at Cimarron, New Mexico, to the Mescalero Apache reservation at Fort Stanton, New Mexico, requiring the removal of said Indians within thirty days after the passage of the act, and forbidding the issue of rations and annuities to said Indians, except at the Mescalero Apache agency, New Mexico, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to issue to said Indians their supplies and annuities at the Abiquiu agency, New Mexico.

Mr. BREWER. I have no objection to that bill.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

Mr. SCALES. There are reports from two committees, and a letter from the Secretary of the Interior recommending it.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Will the gentleman state the substance of the report?

Mr. SCALES. I will endeavor to do so in a few words. By the act of 1878 these Apaches were ordered to be removed down into New Mexico to the Fort Stanton agency; and there was a proviso to the act that they should not be fed nor their annuities paid to them until they got to that agency. They stopped on the way there, have never been able to be forced one foot beyond where they stopped, and are now in a starving condition. It is necessary to repeal the proviso of the act of 1878, so that their annuities may be paid to them.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Is this the unanimous report of the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. SCALES. It is, and also of the Committee on Appropriations. I will ask to have printed the correspondence with the Interior Department upon the subject.

There was no objection.

The correspondence is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 31, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated 29th instant, relative to the starving condition of the Jicarilla Apaches in the vicinity of the Abiquiu agency, New Mexico, and recommending the repeal of so much of the act of June 20, 1878, (Statutes, volume 20, page 232,) as provides for the removal of these Indians to the Fort Stanton reservation, and prevents the issue of rations or annuities to them except at the agency of said latter reservation. For the reasons given by the Commissioner, that owing to the impoverished condition of these Indians an outbreak is imminent unless relief is extended immediately, and that an attempt to remove them would be attended by great danger of hostilities, I have the honor to request that Congress be urged by your committee to carry out at once the recommendation of the Indian Office.

Very respectfully,

C. SCHURZ,
Secretary.

Hon. A. M. SCALES,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 29, 1880.

SIR: By act approved June 20, 1878, (Statutes, 20, page 232,) an appropriation of $5,000 was made to pay the expenses of the removal of the band of the Ute Indians at Cimarron, New Mexico, to the reservation of that tribe in Colorado, and also to remove the band of the Apaches at the same place to the Mescalero Apache reservation at Fort Stanton, New Mexico, with the proviso that "the President shall cause the removal of said Indians within thirty days after the passage of this act; and thereafter no rations or annuities shall be issued to said Indians except at the agencies of their respective reservations."

In accordance with this law an attempt was made to remove the Apache Indians, but they persistently refused to remove further south than the Abiquiu agency, where they now are, and in a starving condition, the Department being powerless to extend them aid on account of restrictions contained in the above act.

Owing to the impoverished condition of said Indians, and fearing an outbreak unless relief is extended immediately, I have the honor to recommend that Congress be requested to repeal that portion of the act referred to forbidding rations or supplies to be issued to said Indians except at the agency located in the Mescalero Apache reservation.

Very respectfully,

E. A. HAYT, Commissioner.

Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCALES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I now call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the communication from the Secretary of War transmitting the report of the Mississippi River commission was referred to the Committee on Commerce. I will state that my object is to have the report referred to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River.

Mr. GIBSON. I feel authorized to state that the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] who on a former occasion objected to the reference now desired, withdraws his objection. He is not now present. I hope the House will allow this report to go to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River. It is a matter of great importance to the people living in the Mississippi Valley.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the papers referred to properly belong to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The communication, with the accompanying report, was then referred to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River.

Mr. ROBERTSON moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COLLECTION DISTRICT OF RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.

Mr. BEALE. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Commerce for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. No. 4214) to amend and re-enact sections 2552 and 2553 of the Revised Statutes. I will state that it is a bill local in its character, making no appropriation and creating no charge upon the Treasury.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That paragraph 4 of section 2552 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so that it shall read: "The district of Yorktown: To comprise all the waters and shores from the point forming the south shore of the mouth of the Rappahannock River, and from the mouth of York River to Cappahosic, in which Yorktown shall be the port of entry, and East River and Cumberland ports of delivery."

SEC. 2. Mr. UPSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back Senate bill No. 296, for the relief of Edward P. Vollum, and to ask that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to, and accordingly the bill was referred to the Committee on Claims.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STONE. I make the point that the morning hour has expired. The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired. During the morning hour several gentlemen desired unanimous consent for the consideration of matters reported by them. The Chair will entertain those requests now. He recognizes first the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. CULBERSON.]

LAND TITLES IN MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. CULBERSON, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary the following preamble and resolution; which were read, considered, and adopted:

A resolution relating to certain land titles in the State of Mississippi.

Whereas it appears by the memorial of Eli Ayres, as referred by this House to the Committee on the Judiciary, that he, the said Ayres, purchased, paid for, and took deeds of certain lands reserved to and located in the name of certain Chickasaw Indians as provided and authorized by the treaty between the United States and the Chickasaw Indians concluded May 21, 1834, and that the said lands so located were legally vested in the said grantors with the right to sell the same; and Whereas it further appears that the said deeds were not approved by the President of the United States as required by said treaty, and that the lands contained therein have since been located by other claimants or sold and patented to other parties by the United States, and the proceeds thereof mixed with and credited to the trust fund provided by said treaty for the Chickasaw Nation of Indians; and

Whereas it is desirable that the titles to the said lands should be ascertained, adjusted, and quieted and determined upon as the ascertained facts may seem to require and as to right and equity may seem to belong: Therefore,

Resolved, That the said memorial of Eli Ayres, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Secretary of the Interior, and that he be, and he is hereby, requested, after reasonable notice to parties interested, to cause a careful examination into the facts and claims relating to the subject-matter thereof to be made and reported to this House as soon as practicable.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN INDIANA.

Mr. NEW. I ask unanimous consent to have considered at this time the bill reported this morning from the Committee on the Judiciary—House bill No. 2384, amendatory of and supplementary to "An act to provide for the holding of terms of district and circuit courts of the United States at Fort Wayne, Indiana," approved June 18, 1878:

The SPEAKER. This bill was reported this morning during the morning hour; and the gentleman desired that it might then be considered, which could not be done under the rules.

Mr. WHITE. Let the bill be read, reserving the right to object.

Mr. BROWNE. To save further trouble, I will state that there is objection to the consideration of this bill now.

CLAIMS OF SPANISH INHABITANTS OF EAST FLORIDA.

Mr. HERNDON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs; which was read, considered, and adopted:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred the message of the President of the United States dated March 1, 1880, in relation to the unsettled claims of Spanish inhabitants of East Florida during the years 1812 and 1813, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to report the following resolution, and recommend its passage:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to furnish to the House of Representatives the history as it may be of record in the Treasury Department of the proceedings had in relation to the unsettled claims of Spanish inhabitants of East Florida during 1812 and 1813, generally known as the "East Florida claims," the settlement of which is provided for by stipulation in article 9 of the treaty of February, 1819, between the United States and Spain.

TAMPA, FLORIDA.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ACKLEN] to submit a report from the Committee on Commerce, as he was out of the House this morning when the committee was called.

Mr. ACKLEN, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Commerce, as a substitute for House bill No. 1025, a bill (H. R. No. 5540) making the port of Tampa, in the county of Hillsborough, Florida, a port of entry and delivery; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MUNICIPAL CODE FOR DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HUNTON, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, as a substitute for House bill No. 3991, a bill (H. R. No. 5541) to establish a municipal code for the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HUNTON. This bill contains a tax system for the District of Columbia which is absolutely indispensable to the Government. I move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF POTOMAC FISHERIES.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table, that we may concur in an amendment of the Senate, the bill (H. R. No. 4568) for the protection of the Potomac fisheries in the District of Columbia, and for the preservation of shad and herring in the Potomac River.

There being no objection the amendment was read, as follows:

In line 18, page 1, strike out "30th day of May," and insert "10th day of June."

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HUNTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I rise for the purpose of calling up the census bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky desires the execution of the order of the House in reference to the consideration of the census bill.

Mr. COX. It will not take ten minutes. It is the most important matter before the House.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the unfinished business, the contested-election case from Arkansas; but the gentleman from Kentucky, by agreement yesterday, was understood to have the right to call up the census bill.

Mr. COX. It will not take ten minutes.

Mr. WHITE. How do you know that?

Mr. COX. From the matters contained in the bill and from the general sentiment on both sides of the House that the preparation for taking the census should go on.

Mr. WHITE. You cannot tell anything about it.

Mr. COX. It has stopped now because of the non-action of the House. It is a public bill, has no local or selfish thing in it; why not go on with it?

Mr. PAGE. It is the understanding that the star service should come up to-day.

Mr. COX. There is only one speech to be made upon it, a short one by my friend from Rhode Island, [Mr. ALDRICH.]

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. It was understood that the census bill was to come up this morning and be acted on.

The SPEAKER. The business coming over is the unfinished business of yesterday, which is the contested-election case of Bradley and Slemmons, and is a question of the very highest privilege.

Mr. WHITE. Then I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. This census bill was set down for to-day.

Mr. WHITE. I demand the regular order.

Mr. CONVERSE. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to me for one moment.

Mr. WHITE. No; I cannot. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SAWYER] is recognized as having the floor.

Mr. COX. I rise to a parliamentary question. After the election case is disposed of, will not the census bill then come up for consideration?

The SPEAKER. It will not lose any of its rights.

Mr. COX. Then I give notice we will call it up immediately after the disposal of the election case.

The SPEAKER. The House has the right to determine by a majority vote whether it will consider it or not.

Mr. COX. I understand that.

ARKANSAS CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—BRADLEY VS. SLEMONS.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the contested-election case of Bradley against Slemmons coming over from yesterday, on which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SAWYER] is entitled to the floor, and has twenty minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] in his remarks saw proper to incorporate the answer of the contestee to the notice of the contest. I see by the RECORD of this morning that answer has been withdrawn. Of that I do not complain; but as reference was made in that answer to a previous contested case in this House of Bradley against Hynes in the Forty-third Congress, and as a portion of the report of the committee in that case was inserted in that answer, I will now take the liberty of reading from that report a few passages in order to substantiate the position I took yesterday that the republican voters of Chicot County and of the second congressional district of Arkansas did not consider Mr. Bradley a republican candidate, but did consider he was unworthy of their support.

I read these extracts for the purpose of confirming the testimony offered by me yesterday and which was read. I will state, however, before reading, that this was a report made in a republican Congress—a unanimous report of the Committee on Elections, a committee composed of H. Boardman Smith, of New York, chairman; Charles K. Thomas, of North Carolina; Jerry W. Hazelton, of Wisconsin; Lemuel Todd, of Pennsylvania; Austin F. Pike, of New Hampshire; James W. Robinson, of Ohio; Horace H. Harrison, of Tennessee; Ira B. Hyde, of Missouri; R. Milton Spear, of Pennsylvania; Lucius Q. C. Lamar, of Mississippi; and Edward Crossland, of Kentucky.

Now, that report, after referring to some preliminary matters, goes on to say:

That after the certificate was given the said Hon. William J. Hynes, the memorialist duly served on him a notice of contest, and thereupon took depositions on due notice, showing a majority of the votes cast at the said election for Congressman at large to have been cast for him; that the above 490 votes should have been returned for him; that after the taking of said testimony the said Hon. William J. Hynes proposed to pay him $1,500 to abandon the contest and deliver to him the depositions he had taken—$500 to be paid down, $500 when he took his seat, and the balance when he drew his mileage; that he accepted the proposal, and gave up the depositions he had previously taken, and that said Hynes thereupon paid him $500.

Mr. Hynes, the member of the House charged, appeared before the committee and made, under oath, a statement relating to the charges against him contained in said memorial. His statement accompanies this report.

He also produced the depositions taken by the memorialist, which had been given up to him.

In the conclusion the committee use this language:

The committee cannot but regard the conduct of the memorialist as dishonorable and mercenary. If he believed he had any merit in his case, he betrayed the rights of those who gave him their suffrages. If he did not believe his contest was meritorious, his demand for money was most dishonorable.

With that additional evidence, I leave that part of the case and now proceed at the point where I closed yesterday with the examination of the testimony in relation to intimidation at precincts in Vaugine Township in Jefferson County.

Mr. FINLEY. Is that the report of a republican committee?

Mr. SAWYER. Yes, of a republican committee of a republican House of Representatives.

Yesterday, at the close of my remarks, I read a portion of the testimony of A. A. C. Rogers in relation to intimidation and other fraudulent practices, as testified by him, in Vaugine Township, at Pine Bluff. I will not repeat that this morning, but refer, for I have not time to go into it in detail, to the testimony taken by Mr. Slemmons on the other side.

Mr. WEAVER. What page?

Mr. SAWYER. Page 90. It is the deposition of W. N. Portis:

Question. Were you about any polls on that day? If so, state where and to what extent.

Answer. I was at both polls in the township of Vaugine in this county; was at them from the time the polls were opened until they were closed.

Q. Will you please give the particulars of the manner of opening the polls on that day?

A. About eight o'clock in the morning, on the day of the election, there was a considerable crowd assembled in front of the court-house waiting for the polls to be opened.

Remember that Rogers states the judges were not there. I will read further from this deposition of W. N. Portis:

As but one of the judges who presided at the September election had made his appearance, it became necessary to elect two more; they were elected from the crowd present at the court-house; Mr. Sam. Franklin was one and a Mr. C. W. Dowell was the other, who were both present at the time of their election; then the polls were opened in regular form and the balloting commenced. As soon as the court-house polls were open we proceeded to the lower poll in Pine Bluff, and two of the regular judges being absent, two judges were elected from the bystanders. Mr. Thomas McGehee was one, and I do not remember the name of the other; Mr. M. K. Hunter was the regular judge present; both polls being opened in an orderly and quiet manner.

Q. What have you to say as to the conduct of the election on that day as to its fairness or unfairness?

A. It was a fair election as far as I observed; I saw no one prohibited from voting on that day that was entitled to a vote.

Q. What evidences of intimidation did you see?

A. None.

There, sir, is the evidence of a man who was there that day at the same time. Mr. Rogers speaks of "intimidation" in his general way without specifying particulars. Then on page 68 I will read the testimony of George W. Prigmore:

Question. Were you about the polls on the day of the election for any considerable time?

Answer. Yes, sir; all day.

This is a republican who testifies to this.

Q. What were your observations as to the general conduct of the election?

A. It was the most orderly election in Pine Bluff I have seen for seven or eight years; less confusion about the polls. Slemmons's democratic friends seemed to be taking considerable interest. I saw no one taking any active interest for Bradley except himself, Mr. Rogers, and perhaps two or three colored men.

So much for that. There you see that in every particular this man Rogers is contradicted by two competent witnesses—a republican and a democrat—who were present on that day.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. SAWYER. I have but very little time.

Mr. BURROWS. I only wish to inquire what precinct you are referring to now?

Mr. SAWYER. To the Pine Bluff precinct.

Here is some more of Mr. Rogers's testimony:

Under pretense of carrying a certain license question, Bradley's tickets having neither license or no license upon them, and the major portion of Slemmons's friends being for license, the Bradley tickets in the hands of several colored voters were taken, under the pretense of writing license under them, and, instead of making this pretended change, the name of John M. Bradley was scratched and the name of W. F. Slemmons substituted.

Now he gives an instance, a particular instance, and names the man who was guilty of such a practice, and I presume it was the strongest case that he was able to refer to, as it is the only one he mentions. He says:

On one occasion, while standing at the ballot-box and giving a Bradley ticket to a colored friend who asked for it, he handed the ticket to one of the judges, but before it fairly passed out of his hands a deputy sheriff put a Slemmons ticket in the hands of the judge, took the Bradley ticket, and the judge put the Slemmons ticket in the box.

My attention was called to this by the gentleman from Iowa, and also by the contestant in this case. He goes on to say:

My attention being called to this, I took down the name of the deputy sheriff; and seeing me writing he announced his name and told me to write it down.

Now I will read the testimony of this deputy sheriff who is alluded to there:

Question. I notice in the examination of A. A. C. Rogers, sworn for the contestant, the following: "On one occasion, while standing at the ballot-box and giving a Bradley ticket to a colored friend who asked for it, he handed the ticket to one of the judges, but before it fairly passed out of his hands a deputy sheriff put a Slemmons ticket in the hands of the judge, took the Bradley ticket, and the judge put the Slemmons ticket in the box." My attention being called to this, I took down the name of the deputy sheriff, and seeing me writing he announced his name and told me to write it down; and then in the cross-examination the following: "Q. Who was the deputy sheriff you saw hand the judge of election the Slemmons ticket in lieu of the voter's Bradley ticket, whose name you said you took down?—A. The party alluded to was Mr. Helzheim, the warehouseman, who told me he did it, and to take his name down if I wanted to. I was informed he was a deputy sheriff, and so believed, for that occasion." Will you now please give your version of the transaction?

Answer. There never was any such transaction occurred; it is a lie. I can tell you what did occur.

Q. Please do so.

A. I was standing in front of the polls on the day of the election, when one Charles Altherman approached me on his way to vote. I called him off to one side, and asked him who he was going to vote for Congress. He told me he thought he would vote for Mr. Bradley. I had a short conversation with him on the subject, in which I dwelt upon the virtues of Mr. Slemmons, when he remarked to me, "It don't make much difference to me who I vote for; give me a Slemmons ticket and I'll vote for him;" which he did. Mr. Rogers then approached me and told me I had no right to do anything of the kind. In alluding to the matter he said he would have me prosecuted for the offense, and I gave him my name in full.

Q. Was there any other conversation between you and Mr. Rogers during that day in regard to taking your name down?

A. We had a conversation on the steps, in which I told him to mind his own business and I would mind mine.

Q. Was there any conversation in that regard in reference to any other voter except that one?

A. No, sir.

There is the testimony by which Rogers is flatly contradicted in the only instance that he relates during his whole testimony in reference to this fraud in changing the votes.

There is some more of Mr. Rogers's testimony to which I wish to call attention in this connection. On page 18 he says:

Later, an assault was made upon Bradley directly—

That has been harped upon by the gentlemen on the other side and also by the contestant himself.

Later, an assault was made upon Bradley directly, by one of the political leaders of Mr. Slemmons, backed by the deputy sheriffs, as I could see, and others, the friends of Mr. Slemmons; and a general outbreak was imminent, and but for the coolness—coolness, forbearance, prudence, and courage of Colonel Bradley and his friends, who counseled peace, there would have been a serious difficulty, such was the feeling of those engaged.

Mark the words—

Now, I turn to the testimony of the party who made the assault, and will read his testimony on the subject. This is the testimony of Mr. W. N. Portis. He was asked:

Question. I see they have you connected with having made an assault upon Mr. Bradley, one of the candidates; state the particulars of it.

Answer. During the day, very near all day, John M. Bradley was very insulting, using very harsh language concerning and toward the democratic party, denouncing them as "thieves, midnight assassins, and robbers." I avoided him on a good many occasions during the day to keep from having a difficulty with him. About two or three o'clock in the evening we met at the court-house polls. There he came right by the side of me, and used the following language: "Come and vote for me, an honest man. Don't vote with a gang of thieves, midnight assassins, and robbers." I asked him to qualify or take back what he had said. He refused to do it. I told him that he had uttered a falsehood. He remarked that if I would step on the pavement he would give me a good thrashing. I went on the pavement. I then again asked him to retract what he had said. He refused to do it, and added that I was at the head of the democratic thieves, assassins, and robbers of this county. I then struck him. He refused to fight, and there the difficulty ended, as far as I was concerned. The next morning I met John M. Bradley in the court-house. He told me that he had done wrong, and was sorry for what he had done, and we have been friendly since that time, as far as I know.

There you have an evidence of the coolness and courage of this man Bradley. But I have not time to comment upon it.

So much for the testimony of Mr. Rogers. As you will see it is contradicted by witnesses in every material particular. What he has testified to has been contradicted in some cases by two and in others by a single witness.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman allow me one question?

Mr. SAWYER. I have only five minutes remaining, and am not nearly through with what I desire to say.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to ask one question for information.

Mr. SAWYER. Very well.

Mr. BURROWS. The gentleman was speaking of what took place at Pine Bluff. I would like to inquire what the canvassing board returned as the vote there?

Mr. SAWYER. We have no evidence of that except from the notice of contest by Mr. Bradley; and I take that as evidence of that fact.

Mr. BURROWS. It appears that Mr. Bradley's majority was returned as 63 in the township of Vaugine.

Mr. SAWYER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROWS. Now, if the election in the Pine Bluff precinct was all fair and right, how does the committee allow him 700 majority in addition in that township?

Mr. SAWYER. We did that arbitrarily. It was not founded on the vote at all and it is so stated in the report.

Mr. BURROWS. While the canvassing board returned a majority for Bradley of 63 the committee admit a majority of 700 more.

Mr. SAWYER. We did not, properly speaking, admit anything at all. We merely admit it arbitrarily and without evidence, on the claim of Bradley. We did it in order to show upon his own statement that he was not entitled to the seat and that this election should not be set aside. If the gentleman will read the report he will see that is clearly stated.

Mr. BURROWS. I have read it.

Mr. SAWYER. Now I have not time in the few minutes remaining to me to go into the testimony in regard to Pine Bluff precinct and the frauds that are alleged there. I will state the matter very briefly and the testimony will bear me out in what I say.

So far as the testimony of Dan. M. Robinson is concerned, he testifies to printing the election tickets at the Pine Bluff Press office as late as six o'clock in the evening. But he is contradicted by three witnesses. The proprietor, C. G. Newman, says there was not a ballot printed at that office, so far as he knows, after twelve o'clock in the day. Portis and Haycock both say they were not at the office, the one after three, the other after four. And yet this man Robinson says they were there after six o'clock folding these tickets which were printed. The evidence, then, of Robinson is contradicted by three witnesses in that particular, as gentlemen will find by reference to the testimony.

Mr. Speaker, I see that my time is about out. I had intended to say something more and go into the testimony, particularly with regard to the Pine Bluff precinct; but I shall not have time.

I now move the previous question upon the resolutions reported by the majority and of the minority of the committee.

Mr. WEAVER. I ask the gentleman from Missouri to withhold the motion for the previous question for a few moments, as I think one or two other gentlemen desire to speak.

Mr. SAWYER. I cannot yield further unless overruled by the House.

Mr. WEAVER. Then I ask the gentleman to allow me to offer a substitute for both the resolutions now pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. Cox.) Does the gentleman from Missouri yield for that purpose?

Mr. SAWYER. I do not. The gentleman from Iowa had the chance of offering that from the sub-committee, but did not avail himself of that opportunity.

Mr. WEAVER. Then I hope the demand for the previous question will be voted down.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the minority of the committee, which the Clerk will now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the seat now occupied by William F. Slemmons as a member of Congress from the second congressional district of the State of Arkansas in the Forty-sixth Congress be, and the same hereby is, declared vacant.

Mr. WEAVER. I call for the yeas and nays upon agreeing to that resolution.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I ask that the resolution may be reported again. I think there is a misapprehension about what it is.

The resolution was again read.

The question being put on ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes 27, noes 116; the affirmative not being one-fifth of the whole vote.

Mr. WEAVER. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered, only 23 members voting therefor; not one-fifth of a quorum.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question being put on agreeing to the resolution offered as an amendment by the minority of the committee, there were—ayes 30, noes 152.

So the resolution of the minority was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the resolution reported by the majority of the committee; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That William F. Slemmons is entitled to retain the seat he now occupies as Representative from the second congressional district in the State of Arkansas in the Forty-sixth Congress.

The question being put, there were—ayes 149, noes 21.

Mr. WEAVER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question being put on ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 33.

So (the affirmative not being one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were not ordered and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. SAWYER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call up the contested-election case of Curtin vs. Yocum, from the twentieth congressional district of Pennsylvania.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to say to the gentleman from Illinois that several gentlemen who are familiar with that case are absent from the city. I hope he will not call it up until they are here. It will be better for him to give notice that he will call it up on a particular day.

Mr. SPRINGER. I gave notice last week that I would call up this case on a particular day, but other business of the House did not permit it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I know that.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have given notice three or four times, and have been compelled to give way to other business. If I am antagonized now by any other proposition of course the House must decide.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In accordance with instructions from the Committee on Appropriations and with the notice which I gave to the House yesterday, I must raise the question of consideration upon the election case to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] refers. I do so in order that we may now proceed to the consideration of the postal star service deficiency bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] asks the House now to proceed to the consideration of the contested-election case of Curtin vs. Yocum. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] raises the question of consideration.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOKER. Is not the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] a question of the highest privilege?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HOOKER. Why should he not be recognized?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized him.

Mr. HOOKER. Why should the matter be referred to the House?

The SPEAKER. Because the Chair has no power to decide for the majority of the House. It is for the majority of the House to determine.

ine what business it will proceed to consider, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] raises the question of consideration.

Mr. HOOKER. Under the rules is it not the duty of the Speaker to recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] before all others?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has done so; but it is not for the Chair to say that the House shall proceed to consider the case which he desires to call up.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope the House will do so.

The SPEAKER. That is another thing.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am informed that the star-service bill will require two or three days for consideration?

Mr. PAGE. It need not take more than twenty minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not know how long it will take. The consideration of this election case has been postponed from day to day and from week to week on account of other business. I think it should be considered now, and if it be taken up now it can be disposed of at least by to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. The only way by which it can be antagonized, it seems to me, is by a motion to postpone its consideration until some other business has been disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would feel bound to recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] or any other member from the Committee on Elections in charge of a case in relation to the right of a member to his seat, whenever he may seek the floor for that purpose. That is a question of the highest privilege; but it is for the House to determine whether it will proceed to consider the case.

The question was then taken upon proceeding to consider the election case of Curtin vs. Yocum, and the House refused to proceed to its consideration.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now desire to call up the bill reported yesterday from the Committee on Appropriations, with the Senate amendments thereto, making appropriations for a deficiency in the star service for the year ending June 30, 1880.

The SPEAKER. The record shows that the bill referred to is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the Senate amendments to that bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SCALES in the chair.

POST-OFFICE DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4736) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriations for the transportation of the mails on star routes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880.

Mr. PAGE. Is it in order to call for the reading of the Senate amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. It is. The Clerk will read the amendments of the Senate.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

In section 1, strike out "$970,000" and insert "$1,100,000."

In section 1 of the bill, strike out the following:

"At or within contract prices as they existed on February 1, 1880: Provided, That upon any route where there has been an increase of the original contract price during the last or current fiscal year for expediting the delivery of mails on any such route, at the rate of more than $2,500 per annum, the compensation for expedited service on such route shall be reduced to the terms of the original contract, on and after the 1st day of March, 1880; and nothing herein contained shall be construed to require the reduction of the number of trips per week over any such route below the present number."

Amend section 2 by striking out the words "or increase the service upon existing routes other than those reduced by the first section of this act" and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall not hereafter have the power to expedite the service under any contract either now existing or hereafter given to a rate of pay exceeding 50 per cent. upon the contract as originally let."

Add to the bill the following:

"SEC. 3. That the sum of $50,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, as aforesaid, for the public printing, including the cost of printing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, it being a part of the deficiency for the current fiscal year."

"SEC. 4. Nothing in this act contained shall be deemed or construed to affect the validity or legality of the acts or omissions of any officer of the United States, or to affect any proceeding therefor."

Amend the title by adding the words "and for other purposes."

Mr. PAGE. Will the Chair state to the committee what is the question now before the committee? Is it to concur in the Senate amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon concurrence in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I understand that the bill is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on a motion made by me, by instruction of the Committee on Appropriations, to non-concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. STONE. And I announced yesterday that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads had instructed me to move to concur in the Senate amendments; and I will make that motion now if it be in order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have the floor and will yield for no motion.

Mr. STONE. All right.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The bill now under consideration is a bill of the House making appropriations for a deficiency in what is known as the postal star service of the country. That bill has been returned by the Senate amended in five particulars, and those amendments are now pending for consideration by this House in Committee of the Whole. It will be found, as we progress with the discussion of the amendments which the Senate has made to this bill, that there is but one material amendment; the others involve matters of very inconsiderable importance.

The Senate has added $130,000 to the amount of money appropriated by the House bill. The bill as passed by the House appropriated the sum of $970,000 to meet the deficiency in the conduct of the star postal service up to the end of the present fiscal year; and it contained the further appropriation of $100,000 for the establishment of service upon new star routes. The Senate struck out the appropriation of $970,000 for the purpose first indicated, and inserted in lieu thereof the sum of $1,100,000. The Senate has left the second sum of $100,000 for new service precisely as the House bill originally contained it. This is not an amendment of any considerable importance.

The House provided that in the case of all star routes where increased compensation to the extent of $2,500 or more had been allowed, not for an increased number of trips but for the expedition of schedule only, such compensation should no longer be allowed, such extra allowance should be cut off and the schedule time upon all such routes put back to the terms of the original contract at the time of letting. All this portion of the House bill the Senate has struck out. So that the only question of any moment presented for consideration now is whether the provision of the House looking to the abridgment of this extra compensation for expedited schedule upon the more largely expedited routes shall be maintained by this House, or abandoned as proposed by the amendment of the Senate.

Before going into any detailed statement of the facts involved, I wish to disabuse, if I may be able, the minds of members of some erroneous impressions into which I am satisfied many members have fallen. In the first place, non-concurrence with this second amendment of the Senate, as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, does not involve that committee, nor can it involve the House, in any war upon the star service of the country. It involves no issue between this House and the Post-Office Department. If that issue is to come, it will come when the committee of investigation instructed by this House to inquire into the cause of this deficiency shall have made its report for your consideration. Neither are we involved to-day in a contest with the contractors for star service. Nor is there an atom of foundation for the assertion that haste is needed in the passage of this bill in order to prevent the abrogation of the star service in all the States and Territories.

It will appear that when this contest first opened the Committee on Appropriations sought to declare, and did declare, just as I, speaking for it now under its unanimous instruction, declare, that the only war in which we are engaged is upon a system which by the record evidence put upon the desk of every member in print, and upon the sworn statements of officials of the Post-Office Department themselves, is in the judgment of the committee a vicious and a dangerous system which needs limitation such as the House bill, without the amendment of the Senate, seeks to establish.

There is no need of haste for this appropriation. The records of the Sixth Auditor's Office, the auditing office for the accounts of the Post-Office Department, show conclusively that upon the first day of the last quarter of the present fiscal year there will be unexpended $650,000 to meet the demands of the postal service. For the current fiscal year the sum of $5,900,000 was appropriated for the star service. That appropriation was made upon the estimate of the Post-Office Department. It was every dollar that was asked. Every dollar requested was given.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Will the gentleman allow one question right here, so that we may be advised on the facts as the gentleman proceeds?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do trust that I may be subjected to as few interruptions as the patience of the House will permit. But I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The object is to be advised as we go along. I understand the gentleman to assert that the amount he has named is all that was asked by the Post-Office Department.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Is it not a fact that a much larger sum was asked for this service, but was arbitrarily reduced by the Secretary of the Treasury in transmitting his estimates?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now the gentleman's question only shows that his purpose is not to get information but to try if possible to switch me off from a plain unvarnished statement of what the record shows to be the fact. I shall therefore ask the gentleman not to insist upon any more questions. I promise on behalf of the committee having this bill in charge that there will be no effort made by the committee to stifle debate, or to refuse to any gentleman as much time as he may wish to controvert any statements or to make any presentation of facts.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Why does not my friend answer the question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will do so in my own way if the gentleman will do me the favor not to interrupt me again. I answer questions in my own way, and only when I believe they are candidly submitted for consideration.

The sum of $5,900,000, as the gentleman from Ohio has succeeded after a waste of a few minutes in forcing me to repeat—the sum of $5,900,000 was every cent that the Post-Office Department asked for the purpose of maintaining the star service of this country for the present fiscal year. It got every cent it did ask. It made its estimates on a more elaborate basis of star service as to distance and numbers of miles than we have to-day in existence or ever did have.

Now, sir, when this Congress convened upon the 1st of December last we found ourselves confronted by a report from the Postmaster-General, in which reference is made to a deficiency of $150,000 for the star service for the last fiscal year, but no reference is made, no intimation is given, of any contemplated deficiency in the star service for the present fiscal year. Yet, sir, this year had been running nearly one-half its length. From the 1st day of July up to the 1st day of December this service was in operation during the present year, and yet upon the 1st day of December, upon the convening of Congress, no intimation is given, no suggestion is made, that there is or is to be a deficiency in the star service to the extent of a single dollar. Yet, immediately thereafter, the Postmaster-General is put in the awkward position of sending a special communication to this Congress telling us the unprecedented deficiency of two millions of money in round numbers is now confronting us in the star service as it was at that time being operated. The Second Assistant Postmaster-General demanded on the 8th day of December an appropriation of $1,720,000 to meet deficiencies in this branch of the postal service on the basis of its then conduct. He demanded in round numbers $300,000 more, making $2,000,000 for the purpose of adding new service to the star branch.

I wish to take up that statement and submit to the candid judgment of this House whether it can safely follow the official recommendations, suggestions, or even sworn statements of that officer when it comes to consider the subsequent revelations which have been made by the records of his own Department. Believing it was utterly impossible that this deficiency of nearly two millions of money could possibly have been created or could in fact be in existence, the committee on investigation, to whom this matter was referred, sent a letter of inquiry to obtain from the Sixth Auditor a transcript of his books in order that we might see how much of the $5,900,000 had been expended and how much the remainder would fall short at the present rates of contract pay for the purpose of carrying it through to the end of the year. We got that report. It lies here on the desk. It is in print, and it says that instead of $1,720,000 being necessary to carry forward that service to the end of the year without curtailing any rates, without abridging any pay, without disturbing the service by a single mile, that instead of $1,720,000 being necessary, $1,155,538.60 was all that was needed; and that exclusive of the fines, penalties, and deductions for failure of service now in the hands of the Post-Office Department and available as current funds for that service every day.

A MEMBER. What was that?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer. For the first half of the present fiscal year, fines and penalties have been imposed and unremitted, standing to the credit of that service to-day as current funds, to the extent of $101,000. Further, the penalties for the last half of that fiscal year are of necessity to be taken into account.

After you make the deduction or before you make any deductions for fines and penalties, here stands the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, testifying before this committee under oath that he needed $1,720,000 to carry this service forward.

Mr. HASKELL. As it stood?

Mr. BLACKBURN. As it stood, without any additional increase at all. Here stands the record of his own department telling you that, without taking into account the fines and penalties of the whole year or any part of it, he only needed $1,155,000, which leaves a discrepancy between the sworn statement of that official and the records of his department of $564,561.40.

But that is not all. You must increase that amount by $200,000 more at least for fines and penalties for the whole year. So that you will find instead of $1,720,000 which he swore was absolutely needed to carry on the service, there are $764,561.40 of that amount, more than three-quarters of a million in round numbers, that is not needed even if you do not set back the expedition of a single route, or reduce the pay on a single trip on this broad continent.

More than that, the Second Assistant Postmaster-General was asked the question as to how much money he had paid out for the first half of the current year. He answered it under oath. The records of his own office were brought into testimony and showed conclusively that he had testified to us to having paid out, in round numbers, $340,000 more money in the first six months of the present year than had been disbursed.

Still more, sir, $347,228.60 is the discrepancy as a matter of fact between his statement under oath—not the approximate estimate, but the actual payments which he had made from this star-service fund for the first six months of the current year, and the facts as shown by the records of his own Department.

When this House passed this bill, it appropriated $970,000 to carry forward the star service. The record of the Sixth Auditor's Office shows to-day that is every dollar of money you want; having used your $200,000 of fines and penalties, it is every dollar you need to carry on the star service to the 30th day of June without impairing or interfering with any trip or abridging any pay or setting back any schedule. Where is the ground upon which these gentlemen stand when they undertake to tell us that the question pending between the House and the Senate is as to whether the star service shall be stricken down; that it is as to whether the star service shall be abrogated, that the House is insisting upon crippling the western mails, while the Senate is insisting upon giving to the frontier settlements extended mail facilities? Neither the House bill nor the Senate bill, so far as the amount of money appropriated is concerned, touches nor trenches upon the postal service in the slightest degree; but the House bill does this, and the Senate bill does not. It does declare that a stop shall be put to the arbitrary action of the Post-Office Department in granting ad libitum additional compensation without bids or without competition upon all the great star routes of the country. Let me call the attention of the House for a moment to the working of this "discretion" which now exists in the Post-Office Department.

The contracts for carrying the star mails of this country are let under advertisement by a system of bids to the lowest bidder. The lowest responsible bidder must get the contract under the law. After that contract has been once awarded, from that time out no reopening of the contract can be had, no bids for modifying it, and no competition is allowed. But the Department not only claims but exercises the arbitrary discretion for increasing the number of trips or expediting the schedule, and the result is the granting of such additional pay as the Department chooses, and without restriction. On the route from Vinita to Las Vegas, originally let for $6,330 per annum, it is now increased under this discretion of the Department—

Mr. ELAM. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question here? I want to know the exact points of difference between the Senate bill and House bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am trying to tell the gentleman. I am trying to answer the question as to the difference between the House bill and the Senate bill.

Mr. ELAM. I would like to know the difference as to these expedited routes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have stated it to the House as plainly as I could, but I will endeavor to restate it in a few brief words.

The House bill declares that wherever $2,500 or more per annum has been allowed for expedition of schedule on any route, that the contract for such expedition shall be canceled and the schedule time put back where it was under the original contract. It does not touch the increase of trips at all. The House bill does not in any wise interfere with the mail facilities as they existed prior to such expedition, and it does not cripple the expedition of schedule unless it has cost more than $2,500 per annum.

Now, sir, if I am able to get back to the point to which I wish to call the attention of the House, I had begun to read the contract prices on certain star routes and the present rate of pay upon them.

In order to illustrate to you the beautiful working of the Post-Office Department "discretion" and the dangerous tendency and fatal results which my friend from Mississippi now before me, chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, so correctly, so justly and so forcibly animadverted upon in a speech in the last Congress, and whose remarks on that occasion I will take occasion to introduce into the RECORD before this discussion shall end, let me state that on this Vinita and Las Vegas route, which, as I have said, was let originally at $6,330 per annum, the pay to-day is $150,592.03 per annum. How was that increase had? Was it done by competition? Were there bids for the additional service? No, sir. No man was allowed to put in a bid or to offer to take the route at a less pay; but the contract having been in the first instance $6,330 per annum, all competition was shut out, and that lucky bidder who undertook it at the rate I have specified is to-day receiving $150,592.03 per annum. And that is not the only instance of this kind. I will cite several others.

On the route from Bismarck to Fort Keogh—

Mr. HASKELL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I cannot now. I do not mean to be unaccommodating, but I wish to continue this line of remarks for a moment.

On this route from Bismarck to Fort Keogh the original contract price was $2,350 per annum. The pay on that route to-day is $70,000 per annum. From Fort Worth to Yuma, which was let originally at $134,000 per annum, the present rate of pay is $299,000 per annum.

On the route from Bozeman to Fort Keogh, originally let at $16,500 per annum, it is to-day $85,266.81. On the route from Rock Creek to Fort Custer, which was let at $10,507.25, the pay to-day is $88,768.12. On the route from Las Vegas to Las Cruces, which was originally let at $14,900 per annum, the pay to-day is $91,211.68. From Prescott to Santa Fé the original pay was $13,313 per annum. Its pay to-day is $135,975. On the route from Prescott to Mohave City, originally let at $7,440, the increase of pay brings it up to $66,959.99. On the route from Phoenix to Prescott, let originally at $680, the pay to-day is $32,640.32. On the route from The Dalles to Baker City, which was let for $8,288, its pay to-day is $72,520. On the route from Soledad to Newhall, which was originally let for $29,000, the pay to-day is $55,424.33; and on the route from Redding to Alturas, on which the original contract price was $5,988, the pay to-day is $35,928 per annum. And so, sir, I might go on. I have a long list before me of like character and proportions. And, I say, that is the result, that is the net product of the exercise of the discretion which the Post-Office Department not only claims, but wields and applies in the conduct of the star service of this country.

Mr. HASKELL. Under law.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Under law, if you please. Because a law is on the statute-book which allows a fatal and dangerous discretion to be exercised, that forms no warrant for your action if you refuse to put a proper limitation on it. More than that; when that official of the Post-Office Department was brought to answer under oath the questions that might be submitted by this committee of investigation and inquiry, it was submitted for his answer to determine whether, Congress having appropriated $5,900,000, upon his own estimate, as the amount needed to conduct this service for a twelvemonth, the law in his judgment allowed him to expend that sum of money in the first six months of the year and leave the country without an atom of star service during the remaining half of the year. Ay, sir, the question was driven further and made broader. I asked that official to tell the committee whether in his judgment he was clothed with the arbitrary power to spend that $5,900,000 which Congress had appropriated for these purposes to last during a twelvemonth, in the first thirty days of the fiscal year, and leave the country with those star routes abolished for the other eleven months, and he answered that was his construction of the law and his estimate of his power.

More than that; when he was interrogated as to the authority he held for putting this star service upon a basis of expenditure that was of necessity to involve this Government in a deficiency of two millions of money, with the law staring him in the face—for this was not under law—with the United States statute staring him in the face, declaring that no Department and no officer of a Department should make any expenditure nor enter into any contract that would involve this Government in the future payment of any sum of money that had not been already specifically appropriated for the purpose, when he was confronted with the law prohibiting either an expenditure or a contract involving an expenditure of one dollar of money for the star service beyond $5,900,000, while before the first half of the year was out he had insolently thrust into the face of this Congress a peremptory demand for the appropriation of two millions of money as a deficiency for this branch of the postal service; and when he was asked for his authority or his defense, or even his excuse for this violation of the law, he answered it was within the compass of his power to stop the star service of the country and cut off your mail facilities over all the star routes, and thereby keep within the appropriation.

Mr. BLOUNT. And within the law.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes. Now, sir, I submit to the candid judgment of the members upon this floor to take the facts as stated by the sworn officers of that Department itself. Take the record as it is made out by their own testimony. Remember that the Second Assistant Postmaster-General tells you that when Congress convened on the 1st of December he knew that he was running the star service on a basis of pay that would necessarily involve a deficiency of two millions of money if kept up to the end of the year; that he tells you the Postmaster-General himself knew about it; that he had advised and consulted with him about it. Couple that with the evidence that no mention is made of it in the Postmaster-General's report. Take it in connection with the fact that the attention of Congress is not called to it. Then take in connection with all these facts the peremptory, sharp order recently issued by the Post-Office Department reducing the service on all the star routes to one trip a week, and tell me when you remember all that and remember further there was no pressing need of money to carry that service on, because their own report shows that on to-morrow they will have nearly $700,000 unexpended money lying to its credit—is there an impartial or fair-minded man on either side of this House who does not know and is not willing to admit that it was the application of the thumb-screw process, a process of extortion to enforce obedience to their demand on the part of Congress and a carrying out of their arbitrary policy without regard to its appropriation.

Why, sir, when that official was on the stand answering the questions put to him by the committee, he stated, and it is here in his sworn testimony, that he knew he was outside of his authority; that he knew he was running on a basis two millions larger than the appropriations would warrant. He thought and believed that he had power enough at his back in this House to carry through his illegal and unwarranted action and to sustain him whether the Committee on Appropriations would or no. He boldly, defiantly, ay, sir, insolently—this subordinate mudsill clerk of a Department—snaps his fingers in the face of an American Congress and bids defiance to its power.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. What do you mean by "mudsill?"

Mr. BLACKBURN. I mean a man of about the proportions of the man about whom I am speaking.

Now what good is to come of our sitting here and considering the necessity for these appropriations, what good is to come of the labor performed by the Committee on Appropriations in conjunction with the several Departments of this Government, if when we meet their every demand, when we give them every dollar they ask for, if when we appropriate every cent that they themselves say will be needed for the fiscal year, they shall within the first five months disregard your limitation, override your appropriation, go outside and in open defiance of the law and say that "Congress has declared that $5,900,000 shall be used for this purpose, but I, the Second Assistant Postmaster-

General, in the exercise of the discretion for which I am responsible to nobody but my own will and motion declare that instead of $5,900,000 it shall be $7,900,000 or $40,000,000 if I choose?" And when arraigned before the bar of Congress, when brought here as a witness before one of its committees, the only explanation vouchsafed, the only defense—no, not defense, but the only excuse pleaded is that he felt pretty well assured that he had backing enough here to override the opposition of the Committee on Appropriations and to carry his policy through despite its limitations.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the gentleman from Kentucky refer to that portion of the testimony to which he alludes?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will state by way of explanation that through the fault of the Public Printer I find that the testimony printed for the use of the Committee on Appropriations (a copy of which I hold in my hand) contains all the testimony of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General. In the compilation of the testimony furnished for the use of the House the Public Printer seems to have left out the first eighty-six pages of the report proper. It is in the testimony published for the use of the committee, not in that for the House, that I find the statement.

Mr. ROBINSON. The gentleman knows I do not like to interrupt him.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It was perfectly legitimate, and I am glad to have the opportunity to make this statement.

Mr. ROBINSON. The gentleman stated that the Second Assistant Postmaster-General had testified that he had power enough in this House to defend or protect him against the result of his illegal actions. Does the gentleman state that as the language of the testimony or does he state it merely by way of argument?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I cannot give the exact language just now; but I will state that I approximate very closely to a verbatim copy, I think, of the response made by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General under oath as a witness, not once only, but twice or three times. His only excuse was that he felt satisfied he was able to maintain these acts of his in incurring $2,000,000 of deficiency outside of the law, in violation of the law, by reason of the power that the star service and the Post-Office Department had at its back in this House.

Mr. HASKELL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question now?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish the gentleman would make a speech in his own time.

Mr. HASKELL. I do not want to make a speech, but to ask you a question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well; go on.

Mr. HASKELL. I want to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if there is a deficiency of $2,000,000 in the Post-Office Department.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Surely that question does not deserve an answer, and I do not think an answer to it is desired.

Mr. HASKELL. The gentleman has stated that there is a deficiency of $2,000,000.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman cannot get into a quibble with me. I say that unless you stop the star service of the country there will be a deficiency—not of $2,000,000. Your Second Assistant Postmaster-General swears to a deficiency of $2,000,000, but the records of his office state that there is not such a deficiency. I said there was a deficiency, and I have given the exact figures shown by the records of the office.

Mr. HASKELL. And I say that there is not a dollar of deficiency to-day in the Post-Office Department.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I want the gentleman to understand that the amount of emphasis that he flings into his unwarranted interruption is altogether gratuitous, entirely unnecessary and absolutely harmless. I say that any man in this House who has one idea above an idiot knows that there is no deficiency. There is an amount of $642,000 in that Department now for this service. But even a man with as little wisdom as the one I have indicated would have sense enough to know that if we carry forward your postal star service on its present basis to the 30th day of June next, it will find you with a deficiency; I say of less than $1,000,000, and I speak by the records of the Sixth Auditor's Office. But the Second Assistant Postmaster-General says officially and under oath that the deficiency will be $1,720,000.

Mr. HAZELTON. Allow me one question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I trust not.

Mr. HAZELTON. Just for information.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I want it understood that I am doing nothing except answering questions.

Mr. HAZELTON. Well, that is right. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not think so, and I am tired of it.

Mr. HAZELTON. I want to ask you for how long a time these contracts are made; whether for one year or for four years?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I thank the gentleman for that question; that is the very point which I wanted to put to this House.

Mr. HAZELTON. You thank me for the question, then?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am sincere in my acknowledgments to the gentleman for his question. Let no man understand for a moment that the contest between the Senate and the House involves a curtailment of the expedited service for ninety days. These arbitrary allowances are upon contracts that stand in many cases until the 30th of June, 1892; not merely for the rest of this fiscal year. The two millions of money, or the more than one million that is represented in these extra and arbitrary allowances for expedited service, do not stop with the current fiscal year at all; but they go on under these arbitrary allowances for the next fiscal year and for the fiscal year after that. Therefore it is a question of two and a half or three millions of dollars which is involved between the House and the Senate.

Now, I take it that there is going to be a claim presented that it is absolutely necessary to expedite this service.

The bill of the House which strikes only at those routes that have been expedited to the amount of $2,500 per annum or more touches but one hundred and seven routes in all this country out of 10,200 routes or more. The bill reaches only those routes held by great monopoly contracting firms—those routes which will carry over a million dollars annually for this expedition, if they are to run until June 30, 1882. It is a question for Congress to determine whether it will put a limitation to the arbitrary exercise of a power that would run the cost of these few routes up to a million and a half of dollars more per annum than they amounted to as originally bid for and originally let.

I do not claim that the gross revenues of any postal route in this country will furnish an accurate standard of measurement as to the necessities of the service on that route, but I do hold it reasonable to assume that the gross revenues upon any postal route in this country will furnish some sort of approximate estimate as to the value or the necessity of the service upon that route.

I find that upon the Prescott and Santa Fé route, where the present pay is $135,975 a year, the gross revenue is $10,844.18; I find that upon the Rock Creek and Fort Custer route, where the pay is $88,768.12, the gross annual revenue is $2,493.50; I find that upon the Bismarck and Fort Keogh route, where the pay is $70,000 a year, the gross revenue is $6,545.77; I find that upon the Vinita and Las Vegas route, where the pay to-day is $150,592.03, the gross annual revenue amounts to $5,640.76; I find that upon the Fort Worth and Fort Yuma route, where the present pay is $299,000, the gross revenue is $35,194. Now, as to the necessity for this service I beg gentlemen to remember—

Mr. SLEMONS. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SLEMONS. What amendment is the gentleman opposing?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the gentleman want the number of it? I am opposing the second amendment of the Senate, which strikes out all the first section of the bill from line 8 to line 19.

Mr. SLEMONS. Is that the additional appropriation of $130,000?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Oh, no!

Mr. SLEMONS. You do not strike out the appropriation at all?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Comparatively speaking, I care nothing about the $130,000 which the Senate has added to the amount appropriated by the House bill. The point I am discussing involves not hundreds and thousands but millions of dollars; not for the remainder of this fiscal year, but for the two fiscal years yet to come.

Now there are fifty-eight routes here on which the expedition of schedule amounts to $1,114,765. There are seventy-three routes upon each of which the cost of expedition was over $2,500 per annum, amounting upon those seventy-three routes to $1,164,765 a year. Agree to the Senate amendment number 2, which strikes out the latter part of the first clause of this bill, and you leave in full force and effect not contracts made but arbitrary allowances granted by the Post-Office Department, after competition and bidding had been excluded, to the amount of about a million and a quarter of dollars a year; you leave these allowances in full force and effect for the balance of this fiscal year, for the next fiscal year and for the fiscal year which is to follow that. This is the issue.

Why, sir, at the present rate of pay over $3,000,000 of the appropriation made by Congress for the star service would be expended in nine Territories and four States. Is that an equitable adjustment?

Why, sir, in regard to the Vinita and Las Vegas route, which is a little over seven hundred miles long, running from the Indian Territory into New Mexico, the committee of investigation had before them as a witness the other night one of the most intelligent and certainly one of the most efficient of all the special agents of the Post-Office Department—a gentleman who has been in that service for five years past. The question was put to him as to the necessity for a route from Las Vegas to Vinita—a route which was let at $6,330 a year, but which to-day draws over $150,000 of annual pay. He said that for about one hundred miles or less than two hundred miles, there was some sort of necessity for the maintenance of a mail. If I had time I would read his letter; for it is printed in this testimony.

Mr. HASKELL. May I ask—

Mr. BLACKBURN. No, sir; I do not give the gentleman permission to interrupt me. This witness said further that for more than five hundred miles of the seven hundred there was no necessity for any mail at all, and never had been. Those facts were reported to the Post-Office Department, and after this statement to the Department by Mr. Adams, its special agent, these enormous, unexplained, and inexplicable amounts of arbitrary allowance in the matter of compensation were piled up on that route. Why, sir, he went on to tell us he had the assurance of the postmaster that from Red River Springs eastward on that route, which embraces more than five hundred and fifty miles of its length, there was no mail carried at all; that the mail-rider would come up with his pouch on his shoulder, usually empty; or if carrying any mail at all he would come back next day traveling westward and carrying the same pouch.

Mr. HASKELL. Will you not tell the whole story?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I decline to yield.

Mr. HASKELL continued talking and the chairman to rap loudly to order, so what Mr. HASKELL said could not be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas must take his seat, as he is out of order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I trust it will not be necessary for me to say again to the gentleman from Kansas that this is my time and he is entitled to no minute of it, nor will he have it. He shall have opportunity to say as much as he pleases. I shall ask the Chair to protect not me, for I will protect myself, but to protect the remarks I may be making from any interjection upon the part of any man who does it without warrant of authority or permission.

The gentleman to whom I have alluded says that he made that report to the Post-Office Department in the fall of 1878. Prompt attention was not given to it, for he testifies that he never heard a word from it until some time in the summer of 1879. It was nearly a year after before the Post-Office Department took the slightest notice of a report by one of its special agents, telling it that on four-fifths of that great route there was no mail being carried and no necessity for a mail. In the fall of 1879 he was ordered to inspect the route, but by reason of prior engagements that order was transferred to another special post-office agent, Mr. Crowell. That man reported he passed over the route from end to end and examined it between its termini. That report is here in print, and he never once says there was any necessity for this increased service or for the continuance of this mail. There is the testimony of one special agent of the Post-Office Department who was never over the line, but who was down upon the line, passed over a part of it, who testifies in his evidence and speaks from his personal observation and from the information he got by reason of inquiries and letters from postmasters along the line. There is the other official report of the special deputy, Mr. Crowell, who did inspect the route, and, while he goes on to say the service is at that time being performed, in the summer or fall of 1879, never says one word that will warrant or support the action of the Post-Office Department in these arbitrary orders of increase of compensation. Yes, sir, and he further testifies, in order to show you how thoroughly an impartial witness Mr. Crowell was, that he was taken over the line by the very men, the contractors on the line, who are the beneficiaries and recipients of this money.

But, sir, the Second Assistant Postmaster-General furnished one other magnificent illustration of the careful prudence with which he exercises this questionable discretion. His attention was called to this route from Prescott to Santa Fé. He was asked in reference to that Santa Fé and Prescott route, as to what was the original contract price for carrying that service. He said it was $13,330. He said he had multiplied the trips; that he had been increasing the schedule, and had allowed $74,000 extra compensation. That was when a man by the name of McDonough was contractor, and a man by the name of Walsh, a banker or broker, here in Washington City, was the sub-contractor, and recognized on the books of the Post-Office Department as such sub-contractor. He says he then canceled the service and stopped the route. He was asked as to the reason for such action, and said it was because the service was not being satisfactorily performed. Mr. Walsh was the sub-contractor for the service; he was that very day recognized on the books of the Post-Office Department as the sub-contractor doing the service. The Second Assistant Postmaster-General canceled the contract and stopped the route because the service was not performed, and then immediately turned round and relet it, without bidding, without competition. He relet the route, and admitted he had never tried to get another man to take it. To whom do you imagine he relet it? He relet it to Mr. Walsh, the very sub-contractor on account of whose failure to perform the service he had been forced to cancel the service. He relet it to Mr. Walsh at $18,500, instead of $13,300 as originally let. He then promptly multiplied the trips and expedited the schedule but not as fast as he had done it before, and allowed, not $74,000 extra compensation again—no, sir! But he allowed him $135,000 extra compensation, and when asked by the committee as to why he did it he said he did it because Mr. Walsh filed an affidavit and said it was worth that much money. He admitted he predicated this action of an allowance of $135,000 of extra compensation per annum upon Mr. Walsh's affidavit and that alone. He first undertook to say he did it on Walsh's affidavit and his failure to get anybody else to take it for less, but then admitted he never tried to get anybody else to take it and never offered it to anybody else.

He relet this route, then, upon the single and only affidavit of this man Walsh, the failing sub-contractor, on account of whose failure the service had been canceled on the route; and there he is to-day receiving $135,000 a year from that route out of the Federal Treasury. I asked the question of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, "Did you know Mr. Walsh before he became a mail-contractor?" He replied that he did. I asked him, "Did you know that Mr. Walsh had been indicted in the Federal courts in New Orleans in 1874 as a member of the whisky ring charged with complicity in the frauds upon the revenues of the Government?" He said he believed he did know it. I asked the question, "Did you not know it, and was not that indictment found against Walsh upon your own sworn testimony as an internal-revenue officer of this Government at that point?" He answered yes. That, he admitted, was the record of this sub-contractor. And such a sub-contractor! The victim of indictment still pending as a member of a whisky ring defrauding the revenues of the Government in 1874, and this indictment found upon the sworn testimony of the now Second Assistant Postmaster-General; that same Walsh, the failing contractor on mail-routes other than this one, with the service canceled on account of his failure to perform his contract, granted a new lease of power, a new hold and another grip on the Treasury of the country to the amount of $135,000 a year; and all of this granted to him upon his own unsupported affidavit. I pray you, tell me what sort of a custodian of the public Treasury does this Second Assistant Postmaster-General make?

Now, sir, I simply desire to call the attention of this House to the fact that he who tries to dwarf this issue down to one between us and the star service of the country deals without candor as to the facts, and without warrant, and he who tries to make it appear that there is an issue between Congress and the star mail contractors has equally little ground on which to plant himself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. I move that the time of my colleague be extended.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope the time of the gentleman will be extended and that all the time possible will be allowed in this discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the gentleman will be allowed to proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I thank the committee for its kindness and I will not detain it but a very few minutes longer.

There is but one issue here, whether you adhere to the House bill or accept the amendments proposed by the Senate. So far as the star service is concerned it stands intact and untouched. You may put the $130,000 additional in the bill, as suggested by the Senate, if you want to. I simply warn you when you do it you do it in the face of the transcript of the record from the Sixth Auditor's Office which tells you it is not needed. If you do not want to put back the expedited routes, if you want the star service to go further on its present basis of pay to the end of the present fiscal year, you do not need $130,000 additional offered by the Senate, as shown in the report from the Sixth Auditor's Office. It is entirely unnecessary. It is uncalled for by the Department.

The only question pending between the two Houses now is simply as to whether or not we will insist upon putting some kind of limitation upon the discretion of the Post-Office Department, the fruits and the results of which have been so imperfectly submitted for your consideration to-day. In any event remember I want this committee to bear in mind the House bill never proposes to discontinue a star route of the 10,200 routes now in operation. The House bill never would result in decreasing the number of trips upon any star route. It never proposed to disturb any but one hundred and seven of the ten thousand and odd routes, and then only proposed to disturb those to the extent of setting back their expedited schedule, but leaving the compensation for increased trips precisely as it now stands.

I take it as an indisputable fact, and I believe that no one will cavil at it or attempt to deny it, when I say that we should be content if we shall give to the Department all that is asked, all that is demanded for carrying on the mail service to the end of the fiscal year in the manner as shown by the record of the Department itself. I know very well that there are some few men who were fortunate enough to hold the contracts for these star routes, some of the great lines in the extreme West, who will be badly hurt if the bill is adhered to, not, however, for the remainder of this year, for if you cancel it you must pay the contractor thirty days' extra compensation, and therefore he would lose less perhaps than sixty days out of this year. That is not where he would be hurt. That would affect his compensation but very slightly for the remainder of this year, and could scarcely be called a serious injury to any one of them, but the injury would be in suffering a diminution of the appropriations of $1,164,765 which would be cut off for the next two fiscal years.

That is where the shoe now pinches. It is for this committee to determine what shall be done.

There is one star contractor, sir, to whom I want to allude, the heaviest star contractor to-day in the post-office service. There is a gentleman who appeared before the Committee on Appropriations or the sub-committee, as a witness. I allude now to Mr. Monroe Salisbury, and he is to-day, as admitted by his own statement, the heaviest star contractor in the post-office service, not in the number of the routes which he controls, nor in the distance or the length of his route, but measured by that most infallible of all standards, the amount of money he gets out of the Federal Treasury. The original pay upon the star routes that are now operated and run by Mr. Salisbury is $532,204. His present pay per annum is $913,225.87. His increase for additional number of trips, which neither the House bill nor the Senate bill proposes to touch, is $214,153.86, while his increased compensation for expedited schedule per annum is $219,505.24.

I here append his tabulated statement as given by himself under oath:

* Reduced $4,250 per annum from October 21, 1878.

Monroe Salisbury contractor on all above routes. Total increase, $523,224.55.

There is one man who stands to-day with an increase, exclusive of allowance for increased number of trips—with an increase for expedition of schedule only of $217,005.24. And yet—is this House prepared to believe it—not a contract of all that list is his upon the books of the Post-Office Department; he does not hold a contract on this continent; and if he ever had one I have never been able to find it.

Mr. ATKINS. He is a contract-broker.

Mr. BLACKBURN. What I say is that he is not a contractor as an original and accepted bidder by competition so far as the record shows. If you want to know how he gets contracts enough to pay him in round numbers a half a million dollars a year over and above the contract price without appearing upon the books of the Post-Office Department as a contractor at all, I respectfully refer you to that Department itself, from which you will be more fortunate than I have been if you are able to glean any such information. But, sir, there is the record.

Now there is exactly where all this fight comes from. There is the power behind the throne upon which Mr. Brady relied when he snapped his fingers in the face of this House and said to them substantially, "You say I shall have $6,000,000 in round numbers; I say I shall have eight millions; I shall have as much more as I please; and when you undertake to produce the law and tell me I am violating it I will appeal to the power that the Post-Office Department and the star service of the country are able to marshal in the House to override the limitations put upon it by your laws." There is the issue, and it is none other. I will be content if the fair-minded and unprejudiced members of this body shall bear in mind the assurance, against which no amount of declamation will prevail, that the fight that is being made here is not upon the star service of the country. Nobody means to harm it; nobody means to touch it; the House bill does not affect it. Neither is it a fight upon the Post-Office Department. Whether it shall be an attack upon that Department or a vindication of its action remains to be determined when this committee shall make its final report after the proof is all in. It is a fight waged with but one object; it is a contest prosecuted with but one purpose; it is an effort that is being made, if it be possible to succeed in doing so, to put a limitation upon an assumed and exercised arbitrary power which is costing this Government at the rates I have indicated without any return or compensation therefor.

Mr. Chairman, I will ask to have read, or that it may be printed, I care not which, a letter that comes from one of the oldest mail contractors in this country from the far West; for he lives far enough west to satisfy in his geography even the advocates of Leadville or those who speak for California. He is a California man himself. He enters his protest. And there lies before me on my desk letter after letter, telling me of protests that have been sent from that far western country to the Post-Office Department, protesting against useless mail service established there at the enormous cost that these figures will indicate. The Post-Office Department takes particular pains to tell us of the demand for increased service, but quietly avoids the slightest mention of protests from that quarter against the service as useless and needless.

I do not believe that a necessity exists for the increased compensation upon the score of an expedited schedule. It is a frightful power if it shall indeed be agreed by Congress that the Post-Office Department may employ it as it insists it shall do. It is sufficient to cause apprehension. If there is no check, if there is no limitation, if the sum fixed in the bill that Congress passes for the maintenance of this service is to form no guide in the conduct of that Department, then, sir, the Treasury is open to any raid that arbitrary power may seek to subject it to; and that, too, perpetrated in the dark, when competitive bidding is abolished, when the open light of day is shunned, and no chance or opportunity is afforded to anybody to come in and do the service of the country upon a fair and legitimate basis of compensation. It is a dangerous power. Its danger has been illustrated. Its results have been proven, and here we stand to-day confronted by one of those results in the shape of an inevitable deficiency amounting, as the Second Assistant Postmaster-General tells us, to one and three-quarters millions of money.

The House may dispose of the disagreements between the two Houses in its pleasure. But I submit in all candor to the unbiased and unprejudiced judgment of the Committee of the Whole whether, when we are confronted by such an issue, prudence and wisdom and fair dealing would not dictate the propriety of non-concurrence in the amendments of the Senate and that we should allow the questions at issue to go to a committee of conference representing fairly the sentiments of both Houses and see if such limitations cannot be imposed, if such an adjustment cannot be had, if such a compromise cannot be effected, and such checks cannot be ingrafted upon this bill as will leave the postal service of the country unimpaired and unbroken and the Treasury Department of this Government at least in some measure protected from such dangerous and arbitrary power.

I ask to insert the following statement of the Sixth Auditor:

OFFICE OF THE AUDITOR OF THE TREASURY
FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., March 2, 1880.

SIR: In compliance with your request of yesterday, I have the honor to transmit herewith statements showing, by States and quarters, the paid and unpaid amounts chargeable to the appropriation for star transportation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, according to the contracts, orders, &c., on file in this office.

In addition to the total amount shown in this statement the sum of $40,000 should be added, being the amount paid for the supply of special offices.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. B. LILLEY, Acting Auditor.

HON. JAMES B. BECK, United States Senate.

A statement showing, by States and quarters, payments made and yet to be made, (as per contracts, orders, &c.), chargeable to the appropriation for star service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880; also the amount of fines and deductions imposed against the service for the quarters ended September 30 and December 31, 1879.

I now ask the Clerk to read the letter I send up.
The Clerk read as follows:

SALINAS CITY, CALIFORNIA, March 17, 1880.

GENTLEMEN: I am an old mail contractor on this coast, and profess to know something of the workings of the Post-Office Department and mail service; and as a Pacific-coast man I am an advocate of liberal facilities for this coast; but I protest seriously in the manner in which the whole thing is managed. I am aware that parties who are in the interest of this wholesale swindling will denounce me as a disappointed bidder or contractor, and this is the reason why I make these charges or exposures. Of course every man is disappointed when he bids for service and does not get it; but I deny that this is the reason why I state these facts. I do it for the reason that for a long time, but particularly for the last eighteen or twenty months, there has been the most reckless and unnecessary expenditure of the public funds that can be imagined. I notified Judge Key of this fact as early as November or December, 1878. You call on him for a letter he received (personally) from me, written in November or December, 1878; and also one written about January 14, 1879; and also get from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads a letter I wrote to Hon. A. M. Waddell, chairman of said committee, dated about January 6, 1879. These letters were written when these facts were all fresh in my memory. I have none of the data now before me that I had when I wrote those letters—nothing has transpired to change my views since I wrote them. I was much disappointed when Judge Key wrote me thanking me for the information I had given him, but at the same time declined to make any changes or to investigate the matter, stating that these changes had been made by General Brady during his absence as he thought upon good and sufficient data. It was not until after I had received this letter from General Key that I wrote to Hon. A. M. Waddell. I was greatly surprised at General Key's reply for several reasons. First, I had formed a very high estimate of General Key's integrity, and thought he would be glad to be informed of these facts and would rectify them as soon as his attention was called to them. (I do not wish to be understood as doubting General Key's integrity, but I think he has been overreached by designing parties.) Second, when I was in Washington in February, 1878, bidding on mail contracts, General Key told myself and others that we must bid at what we expected to pick up these mails and carry them for; that there would be no more shortening up schedules and increasing the service as had been done heretofore; that he was determined to put a stop to such business.

I leave it to you to judge whether he has acted in accordance with his statement at that time. This is what old contractors on this coast particularly complain of, having been deceived by the heads of the Post-Office Department in this way. These routes that I wrote General Key and Waddell about should be put back at what they were originally let at, except the route from Fort Worth, Texas, to Yuma, Arizona. The shortening up of that schedule was right, but $50,000 for expediting the service is all that should have been given, whereas the Department is paying $165,400 for expediting this service. I bid on this route $217,000, and after talking with Governor Brown, vice-president Texas Railroad, I thought through his influence and the Texas delegation in Congress that I might get the schedule shortened three or four days, and for which I might get $50,000, making $267,000; but here comes a party that takes the contract for $83,000 less than my bid, and in less than five weeks after his service commences he gets $31,000 more than double of his original contract, and $32,000 more than ever I expected to get on a bid of $23,000 more than his. Can you find another case of such wholesale work as this? There is one more small contract that I now recollect of that the service might be doubled on, from Reading to Yreka, via Scott Valley. This was let three times a week for $4,000. This might be put up to six times a week, which would make $8,000, but I believe they have worked this up to $22,000 a year. There was no earthly necessity for shortening up this schedule, but I hope you will get my letters to General Key and Hon. Mr. Waddell, as they were written when I had the data before me and everything was fresh in my memory.

Where the wrong has been that a few favorites have taken these large routes at much lower figures than the service could be performed for, but that in a very short time they have worked them up beyond all reasonable expectations. There may not be anything wrong about it, but you cannot convince outsiders that there is not. You will never catch any one. It is almost useless to try or to expect to catch them, for if there is anything wrong they cannot afford to expose each other. When the Department advertised this service they knew then as well as they knew afterward what service was required, and, so far as my knowledge goes, in most instances they were advertised for just what service was required; and why all this sudden change in these large contracts awarded to a few favorite contractors? It does look to me as though there was something very rotten somewhere along the line, but it will be many a long day before you will saddle the wrong on any one, only by surmise; but you order the Postmaster-General to put back all contracts that amounted to over $5,000 to the original letting, and you will soon find out where the shoe pinches. I suppose there are some instances where the service on contracts of over $5,000 ought to be increased some, but limit him to 20 or 25 per cent. over the original contract. You limit him to this on and after 1st July, and let him give notice at once of the change proposed. I am ready to meet or go before any committee and make good what I write. Mr. Buckley, of San José, California, is ready to do the same thing. He is familiar with nearly all the facts I have stated. I do not seek any notoriety, but I do think it the duty of every good citizen to expose such recklessness and wasting of the public funds. At one time I was the largest mail contractor on this coast, and I challenge any one to investigate my acts as a contractor or otherwise. I refer you to all of the California delegation.

Very respectfully,

J. D. CARR.

I am sixty-five years old; do not know that I shall ever engage in the mail service again. I certainly will not if this state of things is to exist.

Hon. Messrs. ATKINS and BLACKBURN,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. UPSON addressed the committee, but did not conclude his remarks. [His speech appears in full on page 2035.]

Mr. WHITE. If the gentleman from Texas will yield to me I will make a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. UPSON. How much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty minutes.

Mr. UPSON. I yield for a motion that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield the floor?

Mr. UPSON. Yes, sir; if it is understood that I shall be permitted to go on to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. UPSON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to move that the committee rise.

Mr. WHITE. I move that the committee rise.

The question being put, there were—ayes 23, noes 40.

Mr. PAGE. A quorum has not voted.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum is not necessary for the committee to refuse to rise.

Mr. PAGE. Is not a quorum necessary for business?

The CHAIRMAN. It is, and if the gentleman makes that point the Chair will sustain it.

Mr. PAGE. I do not make the point.

Mr. BLOUNT. Who has the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. UPSON] has the floor. He will proceed.

Mr. HASKELL. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. HASKELL. In the first place I would like to have order.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

Mr. HASKELL. And in the next place I call for tellers on the motion that the committee rise. It is now half past four. The House is thin, and a dozen gentlemen want to speak, and I think we might as well adjourn.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a point of order, but if the gentleman states he called for tellers in time, the Chair will still put the motion. Does the gentleman state he asked for tellers in time?

Mr. HASKELL. I did ask for them in time. I asked for tellers on the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. SPARKS. The question is, did the gentleman ask for them in time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman says he did and the Chair will submit the question on ordering tellers.

The question was put, and there was 1 in the affirmative; noes not counted.

Mr. HASKELL. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HASKELL. My point of order is that the want of order in this Committee of the Whole was such that the putting of the motion for tellers was not heard and that the motion was not voted on. I ask that before the call for tellers is submitted the committee shall be in order and then if gentlemen do not desire that the committee shall rise, I am satisfied.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not the fault of the Chair. The Chair put the question distinctly and the House refused to order tellers.

So tellers were not ordered and the motion that the committee rise was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. UPSON] will proceed.

Mr. UPSON. I desire to state that I have been suffering from a severe headache all day and am suffering from it now, and I should feel indebted to the courtesy of the House if the committee would now rise and I should be permitted to finish my remarks to-morrow. But if it is insisted upon, of course I shall have to go on.

Mr. REAGAN. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. SPARKS. I hope that will be done out of courtesy to a gentleman who says he is sick.

Mr. REAGAN. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. HILL.]

Mr. HILL. I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD, as a part of the debates in the Committee of the Whole, some remarks I have prepared on this bill.

There was no objection. [See Appendix.]

The motion of Mr. REAGAN that the committee rise was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCALES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4736) providing for a deficiency in the appropriation for the transportation of mails on star routes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CONVERSE. I ask unanimous consent to make a few reports from the Public Lands Committee and one from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, because I cannot be here to-morrow when those committees will be called. I desire to make the reports simply for reference.

There was no objection.

HEIRS OF W. A. BURT.

Mr. CONVERSE, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2689) for the relief of the heirs of the late William A. Burt, inventor of the solar compass adopted and used in the public service of the United States, and moved that it be referred to the House Calendar and that the accompanying report be printed.

Mr. CONGER. Does not that bill contain an appropriation?

Mr. CONVERSE. No amount is named.

The SPEAKER. If the point of order rests against it, it is better that it should be made at once. It would cause delay to the bill if the point should only be made when it is reached on the House Calendar.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEORGE HEARD.

Mr. CONVERSE also, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 309) for the relief of George Heard; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

DRURY BYNUM.

Mr. CONVERSE also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1531) for the relief of Drury Bynum; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

L. L. RICE.

Mr. CONVERSE also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 519) authorizing L. L. Rice to locate land warrant No. 79099, issued under act of March 3, 1855, in his own name or to sell and assign the same; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CESSION OF LANDS TO OHIO.

Mr. CONVERSE also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 580) to construe and define "An act to cede to the State of Ohio the unsold lands in the Virginia military district in said State," approved February 18, 1871; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MILITARY RESERVATIONS IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Mr. CONVERSE also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the following resolution of inquiry:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to inform this House what military reservations in Washington Territory can be restored to the public domain without detriment to the public service.

The resolution was adopted.

SAMUEL BAKER.

Mr. CONVERSE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5542) to increase the pension of Samuel Baker; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES O'CONNOR.

Mr. DAVIS, of Missouri. I ask consent that Senate bill No. 551, granting a pension to James O'Connor, be taken from the Speaker's table at this time for reference.

There was no objection, and the bill was accordingly taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JAMES H. REEVE.

Mr. TAYLOR. I ask consent that Senate bill No. 39, granting an increase of pension to James H. Reeve, be taken from the Speaker's table for reference.

There was no objection, and accordingly the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting revised estimates of appropriations for the National Board of Health; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

WILLIAM P. WOOD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in relation to the claim of William P. Wood for the detection and recovery of the plate on which spurious 7.30 bonds were printed; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed, and requested the concurrence of the House in, bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 1085) to equalize homesteads;

A bill (S. No. 1293) to provide for the erection of a public building at Asheville, North Carolina; and

A bill (S. No. 1475) to change the name of the steamer J. H. Kelly to John Thorn.

Mr. COX. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 1, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION OF 1883.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to state that yesterday, in the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1160) to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the treaty of peace and the recognition of American Independence by holding an international exhibition of arts, manufactures, and the products of the soil and mine, in the city of New York, in the State of New York, in the year 1883, the seventh section of the bill was stricken out. In the following sections there are references to the seventh section which are not now applicable. Although the defect is a formal one the Chair has not felt it proper to direct a correction of it, but with the consent of the Senate the bill will be engrossed to correspond with the fact.

Mr. KERNAN. It should be corrected so as to read "ten" instead of "eleven" and "nine" instead of "ten" in renumbering the sections.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The correction will be made unless there be objection.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3035) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Waite and other citizens of Concord, New Hampshire, praying for the removal of the United States circuit and district courts from Exeter to Concord, in that State; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DAWES. I present the petition of Thayer Lincoln and many other persons, ship-owners, ship-builders, merchants, manufacturers, and others, praying that Congress inquire into the legality of the bridge being constructed between the cities of New York and Brooklyn under an authority of Congress conditioned that the bridge should be so constructed as not to obstruct, impair, or injuriously modify the navigation of the river. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES presented the petition of R. F. Hatfield and others, heirs of Robert G. Hatfield, deceased, and citizens of Massachusetts, praying for the passage of a bill to authorize the Commissioner of Patents to hear and determine the application of the legal heirs of Robert G. Hatfield for the extension of his patent for an improvement in sliding-door sheaves; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. SLATER presented the petition of A. Noltner, publisher of the Daily and Weekly Standard, and Baker, Bull & Co., publishers of Resources of Oregon and Washington and Rural Spirit, Portland, Oregon, praying for the passage of a bill placing wood and straw pulp, soda-ash, and other chemicals used in the manufacture of paper on the free list, and reducing the duty on printing-paper used for books, pamphlets, and magazines at least 5 per cent. ad valorem; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of R. O. Thomas, postmaster at Turner, Oregon, and others, citizens of Oregon, praying for an appropriation of $20,000, or three sections of land to each mile of the sixty by which the Marion and Wasco Stock and Wagon-Road Company passes the Cascade Mountains, under condition that the United States mails, troops, and supplies for troops or other employees of the United States pass over the road free, and that the State of Oregon regulate the tolls upon the same; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.
